MARGARET TORRINGTON ; OR, THE VOYAGE OF LIFE.

THE OLD COACH-DAYS.

I promised, feeling deeply the simple truth and kindness of this faithful creature, who had alternately scolded, and lectured, and petted me ever since I could remember. And then, after a few more words, interrupted by sobs and prayers, Susan bade me good-bye, but turned again to the door to remind me that I might upon emergency always find a home with her at 7, Sea-viewterrace, St. Eldred's West, or wherever she might be.

Before I lay down that night I looked out upon the sea, gleaming faintly in the starlight. Far away I could see the lighthouse softly shining like a planet, and dark against the broidered sky the broad grand summit of the Black Tor Head. Ah! what should I see if another night I drew back my curtain, and gazed out into the shadowed world? Not, certainly, that vast expanse of sea and sky, and that long line of rugged cliff and undulating down; for Cotswoldbury was in one of the south-western midland counties, and its waters were its mineral springs and the wretched little river Cote, not deep enough to drown a baby, save after some tremendous fall of rain. But Cotswoldbury was a very fashionable and aristocratic town, though it had no coast, nor gracious tidal river rolling to the sea; and it is still a town of some importance, very clean, and very pleasant in the summer-time by reason of its shaded boulevard-streets, the like of which exist not in any other English town or city, and very gay with elegantly dressed ladies, and very imposing with wrinkled dowagers and monied spinsters, who patronise "Cavendish & Co." on the Promenade more liberally even than the younger and fairer feminines of Cotswoldbury. I knew nothing about that despotic institution, yclept " society," till I had lived some time un-der the amphitheatre of hills that swelled around my new and inland home. In those days Cotswolebury was the resort of innumerable patricians, even of royalty itself ; and foreign potentates thronged to its spas, and quaffed their unpalatable draughts with apparent relish, and secret nausea and grimace. Now, alas! its glory is departed, and Ichabod is written on its pumprooms; wealthy retired tradespeople have the impertinence to live on the came terraces as needy gentlefolk; young ladies, whose papas are vile enough to buy and sell calico and silk, or figs and composite candles, or jewellery, or photographic albums, play croquet on the self-same lawn, albeit they play not the same game, as the daughters of Greek and Polish counts, French chevaliers, and Italian principessas. Cotswoldbury has fallen from its high estate, though still the actual barrier between the trading and non-trading portion of the community is as strong and high as ever; and it has what it had not in its more palmy days-two colleges-one for boys, the "sons of gentlemen," and the other for girls, the "daughters of gentlemen;" very select and very expensive both of them, though perhaps a little snobbish. A shopkeeper, though he were a modern Cræsus, could not get his daughter into that very genteel "Ladies' College;" at least, you

But I shall have to write about Cotswoldbury as it was more than a quarter of a century ago not a fourth of its present size then, but infinitely more distinguished. Henceforth, I give you, not records of St. Eldred's-by-the-sea, but chronicles of Cotswoldbury, racy, curicus, and occasionally scandalous; promising, however, not to degenerate, if I can help it, into absolute slander and mere gossip.

But just for one minute to return to North must be professional if you wish your offspring

to share in the educational advantages of the patrician ranks of Cotswoldbury.

Combe. I woke in the grey, cold dawn of the dull November morning, and knew before I was well awake that some momentous change awaited me. I sat up and looked out of the window, and saw a steely-grey sky hanging low over a steelygrey sea, and steely grey mists clinging to the beetling cliffs, that rose, shadow-like, in the imperfect light of the early, sunless day. And with a dull, hollow murmur the waves rose and fell upon the lonely shere, and tangles of tea-weed lay at our very gate, washed up by the night spring-tide! Any one else would have thought the scene desolate in the extreme, but to me it wore a beauty all its own. I loved the sea passionately as the Greek islander who pined away his life in the Vale of Tempe; it was my friend, -my old grand, mysterious friend, -whose face I had seen in all its varying aspects ever since l could remember. What should I do without it? My life would not be so sad, I thought, if I could only now and again steal out and tell my troubles and my joys,—if, indeed, any more joys were in store for me, which I greatly doubted,—my cares and my aspirations to the winds and waters I had known so long and loved so well. But, ah! there were no briny odours at Cotswoldbury, no salt sea-foam, no majestic voices sounding through the stillness of the night, no "many-twinkling smile of ocean" to gladden one when the sunshine brightened all the waves at sunrise or at eventide ;-no, indeed ! for Cotswoldbury was many a weary mile from the sea, although the petty little Cote, after gurgling through the town and turning a mill or two of small pretenwards into the estuary of the Severn.

I was scarcely dressed when Clara came to call me, and then, not trusting ourselves to speak, we began to be busy about some little matters of packing, which, wisely or unwisely, had been left to the morning; wisely in this case, I am inclined to believe, since, in trying to lock a gaping portmanteau and in searching for a missing strap, we were so occupied, and necessarily so much interested, that scant leisure remained for the indul-

sions, did fall into a stream, which, joining itself to another stream, found its way not long aftergence of vain regrets.

At last came the parting moment. I was pla At last came the parting moment. I was placed in the carriage. Nearly all my luggage had gong on before me in the carrier's cart; and Dr. Berners and I were on our way to the Golden Ram in the High-street, where the Bristol coach started every morning at ten o'clock. The horses were already put to when we arrived, and only my seat in the interior of the lumbering vehicle was empty. A brief and fatherly adieu from the good Doctor, and a momentary clinging to him, as if, in sheer desperation, I would not let the old life go; a final "God bless and keep you, my poor girl?" and the coachman cracked his whip, and the impatient horses began their wonted journey. And when, at length, I recovered myself sufficiently to look about me, we had already passed the familiar landmarks of the road, and were slowly plodding up a steep hill, which led right over to the Downs, into what had always seemed to me another world.

(To be Coatinued.)

THE SMALL DUTIES .- God, does not require rest things of us, " for he knoweth our frame ; he remembereth that we are dust." He only asks that we shall serve him in the little everyday acts of life. Jesus served God as truly when, as a boy, he worked with his father, as when, in later life, "he went about doing good." It is not the act, but the consecrated spirit, which at tracts the approval of God.

COMMON SENSE VIEW OF THE MODE IN WHICH

Hostetter's STOMACH BITTERS

ACT UPON THE HUMAN SYSTEM.

THIS is an age of inquiry. People want to know the why and wherefore of all statements submitted to them as facts, and as far as this GREAT PROTECTIVE AND INVIGORANT is concerned, it is proposed to gratify them.

All the physicians admit that the greatest difficulty they encounter in their practice is in conveying to the seat of the disease the medicament that will counteract and neu tralize it. Electricity has been tried for this purpose, but it is now generally admitted that the electric fluid is too subtle an agent to be made the vehicle of medication. It shocks the nerves, but cannot distribute through the system things are not itself. Medicated electricity is in tem anything except itself. Medicated electricity is, short, an exploded humbug. But a liquid stimulant, as everybody knows, can be charged with the essential properties of any and every substance in the Materia Medica, and there is 10 herbial extract which it will not hold in solution with all its respective of the contract of the contra lution, with all its preventive and curative virtues unim-

Now the pure liquid stimulant of which Hostetter's Bitters are in part composed, is charged with invaluable vegetable remedies; and these, by reason of its powerful diffusive principle, it conveys to every organ and introduces into the circulation. To use a common expression, it goes to the spot, taking with it just what is wanted there. The Essence of Rye would undoubtedly diffuse itself through the organization as swiftly if administered pure and simple, as if mixed with the juices of tonic and alterative roots, barks and herbs. But of what use would it be with out their healing, strengthening, life sustaining balm? It would merely excite. It could neither protect nor cure. And herein lies the essential difference between the effect of the purest stimulant when given alone, and the same stimulant when administered in the medicinal form of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.

Good monongabela spirit is doubtless the mildest and most innocuous of all the varieties of liquor, but it only becomes a healthful medicine when im reguated with the vegetable elements employed in the preparation of the Bitters.

TO DYSPEPTIC SUFFERERS.

Under the general head of Dyspepsia may be classed all the varieties of Indigestion. Its symptoms are so various, and differ so much in different individuals, that it is almost impossible to classify them. In fact, some of them are in describable. It may be safely asserted, however, that half of the diseases of mankind spring from a disordered state of the stomach; and that the other half, whatever their origin, react upon that sensitive and important organ. Among the ordinary indications of Dyspepsia are flatulence, a bloated and full teeling about the stomach and abdomen immediately after eating, a gnawing sensition, or a sense of bullowness at the pit of the stomach between meals, a dull heavy feeling in the head, feeble or unsteady appetite, dull heavy festing in the head, feeble or unsteady appetite, occa ional nausea, restlessness during the night, and a weary, unrefreshed feeling on rising in the morning, palpitation of the heart, depression of mind, sometimes amounting to monomania, loss of memory, confusion of thought, sour stomach, with raising of food, and a choking sensation in the throat, dimness of the eye, pain in the diaphragm, feebleness and disinclination for exertion, and sometimes emaciation and a corpse-like pallor. These are a few of the direct signs of Dyspepsia, but as it is generally complicated with specific affections of the bowels, the liver and the nerves, its victims have many additional torments, which are technically attributed to other causes.

The best advice that can be given to any one who has the alightest predisposition to Dyspepsia, is to fortify his or her digestive organs by the daily use of HOSTEITER'S BITTERS.

HOSTETTER'S BITTERS. HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

The disease proceeds from a lack of vigor in the stomach, and this vitalizing preparation will tone and renovate that organ. If the gastric apparatus is in good working order, and can perfectly dissolve and thoroughly assimilate the food submitted to its operation, there will be no dyspepsia. It it cannot do this, if requires reinforcement, and the best of all reinforcing agents should be forthwith resorted to. The stomach is the commissary of the system. It supplies the elements of lite to the whole body. In it is prepared the material of blood, muscle, bone and fibre, and if it fails to purvey that material in sufficient quantity and of a proper kind, the whole body suffers, and with it the mental faculties. Therefore protect the "Commissary Department." Don't let the commy obtain pussession of it. It is easier to prevent disease from getting into an organ, than to expel it after it becomes a caronic fixture. Consider the first indication of uneasiness in the stomach as a sign that dyspepsia is preparing to attack, and buffle it at once with this great repellant.

But if it is too late to prevent, remember that it is not But if it is too late to prevent, remember that it is not oo late to cure. It is believed that there is no case of chronic indigestion that can withstand the remedial operation of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.

This belief is grounded on twelve years' experience of the efficacy of the preparation. The first instance of its failure to give relief is yet unchronicled. If it ever had failed, the voluminous correspondence addressed to the proprietors from all parts of the United States and South America, would at least include one letter expressing dissatisfaction. But no, there is not one! The testimony, extending over a period of more than a dezen years, is all of the same approving tenor. Certainly this is a sufficient warrant for claiming that the BITTERS are a SPECIFIC FOR INDI-
