

JESUS WEPT.

Jessie wept! those tears are over,
But his heart is still the same.
Kinsman, Friend and Elder Brother
Is his everlasting name.
Saviour, who can love like thee,
Gracious One of Bethany!

When the pangs of trial seize us,
When the waves of sorrow roll,
I will lay my head on Jesus,
Pillow of the troubled soul.
Surely none can feel like thee,
Weeping One of Bethany!

Jessie wept! and still in glory
He can mark each mourner's tear,
Living to retrace the story
Of the hearts he soled here.
Lord, when I am called to die,
Let me think of Bethany!

Jessie wept! that tear of sorrow
Is a legacy of love;
Yesterday, to-day, to-morrow,
He the same shall ever prove.
Thou art all in all to me,
Living One of Bethany!

THE NEST IN THE MAPLE-TREE.

It was a little brick school-house of which I have to tell you, in the city, and the yard was trodden by so many feet, that no green grass grew there, except a few blades that hid themselves in the corners or under the fence. But years ago some kind man had planted three large maples, which shaded the whole front in summer. The boys loved to stand beneath them with their hats off, and get cool before coming in to lessons, and nursery maids, drawing pretty, bright-eyed children in tiny carriages, stopped to rest a little on the steps, and enjoy the breeze.

George was a monitor in one of the rooms on the second floor, and his duty was to stand at the head of the stairs, and be sure that all the boys came up the stairs in a quiet, orderly way. He was almost always the first boy at school. One morning he took his place as usual, but soon came very softly into the school-room saying, in a half-whisper, "O Miss Graham, do come here!" I followed him on tip-toe, and there, on a bough of one of the maples, two birds were building a nest. How they chattered to each other and bustled about, and how busy they were!

George was delighted. "Oh! how nice it will be!" he cried. "I can stand here and watch them every morning this summer." Then he added earnestly, "Don't tell the other boys, please, Miss Graham; I'm afraid somebody will tell them if you do."

I knew of only one boy in my school who seemed to me wicked enough to injure these beautiful little creatures who were fearfully making their home so near us. But I thought, with George, it would be best to say nothing about it.

Every morning George came early and went with me to look at the nest. It was curious to see how many things helped to build it: straw, thread, bits of cloth, twigs, and other things.

"How can they make such a soft, cunning little house out of such things?"

"God taught them."

"And will God take care of them, too?"

"Yes."

George was careful to be quiet, and the birds seemed to know him. They grew quite accustomed to see his face at the window, and were not at all afraid of him. One would turn his little head and look out of his shining eyes, and then warble two or three quick notes. George thought he said, "Good morning! Good morning! We're not afraid! You wouldn't hurt us! No! no! no! But don't tell! don't tell!" Perhaps it did, who knows!

But one day George came to me in great distress. "O Miss Graham, William Rumford has seen our birds, and he says he'll come some Saturday, when you can't see him, and steal the nest! You said God would take care of them, but now they'll be killed! Its too bad! Its too bad!"

I quieted George's fears as well as I could, and tried to think what was to be done. William Rumford was the worst boy in school. He was the terror of the neighborhood in which he lived, and his bad conduct had given me many sad hours. The clock struck nine. George came in, closing the door behind him. Every sound ceased. Sixty boys and girls sat before me, waiting for me to open school. We always sang a hymn first. Now their voices went up in sweet harmony, and just as the last note died away, the bird on the tree outside the window struck up one of the loudest, sweetest bird-songs I ever heard. Every breath was hushed, every head bent forward to listen earnestly; bright eyes grew brighter, and when the song ceased a smile played on every face.

I saw that all were touched, and caught a surprised look from William. I took up the Bible, and read those few verses in which our Saviour speaks so beautifully of his care for "the birds of the air" and the "lilies of the field." Then I told them of the secret which had been George's and mine until lately, how busily the birds had worked at the nest, and of the tiny eggs over which they seemed so happy.

I talked with them some time, and, as I did so, I saw William's head shake in doubt, and then his eyes fell with shame. "And now," I said, "is there one boy here who can find it in his heart to trouble these dear little birds? Are you all ready to promise me that they shall still hold their nest in the maple tree in peace! If so, hold up your hands."

All the hands came up instantly but one. William hesitated just a minute, then the black curls were thrown back as his head came up, his hand rose promptly, his eyes sparkled, and I knew our birds were saved! Birdie had pleaded his own cause, and won!

At recess, George came running to me. "O teacher, I'm so glad! I think God did take care of the birds, though you helped him just a little bit, for William Rumford says he didn't mean it when he said he'd steal the nest, and he should be ashamed to touch 'em now!"

After this we all watched the birds, and through the whole summer I could offer no greater reward than to allow a good scholar to rest five minutes, and stand by the window, where he could feel the breeze and look into our nest in the maple tree.

now but make the best of it, and learn that while you are 'just going' your chance may be just gone."

Jessie, who had early learned that "it is of no use to cry for spilled milk," drew a deep sigh, and sat down to console herself with a book.

By-and-by her mother put down her work-basket, and went out of the room, saying—

"Jessie dear, look after the baby, and don't let him go out of your sight."

"Yes, mother, I'll watch him. Here, Birdie, come see what Jessie has got!"

Baby took the china doll she gave him, tasted of its head, poked the floor with it, shook it as a cat would a mouse, and then crept off on an exploring expedition. Presently Jessie heard a crash and a cry that made her heart stand still. She rushed into the next room, and there sat baby Dick on the floor, covered with bits of broken glass, and a little stream of blood running down his white forehead. He had pulled over his head and broken a vase on his own head. His scream soon brought their mother, and while she was bathing the wound, Jessie stood by, saying—

"I had missed him, and was just going after him, when I heard him cry. Poor little Dick!"

"If you had only gone, my daughter, instead of meaning to go," was the answer, "he would have been saved this sad wound."

When Jessie's mother went up to bed with her that night, she asked—

"Has this been a pleasant day to my girl?"

"No, mother, it has been the worst kind of a day. In the first place, I was late at school this morning, and that put me out of humour for the whole forenoon. Then I couldn't go with Hal, and worst of all, poor baby got hurt. Hasn't it been a day of misfortunes?"

"And every one of them has happened because you were 'just going' to do, instead of doing."

Jessie unlaced her boots in silence. At last she said, "But I never mean to be late."

"Of course you don't. But the mischief is, my dear child, that you feel as if it were all well enough as long as you are just going to do your duty. That is a great mistake; 'just going to' is nothing. Do it. Don't stop to mean to do it."

"And Mrs. Richmond spoke so earnestly that Jessie looked up into her face and said—

"Mother, what makes you care so much about it? Do you think I am so very bad?"

Her mother took her in her arms and answered, "I am sick at heart, Jessie, because I am afraid 'just going to' will spoil your whole life. It cheats you of your pleasures, and hinders you from your duties—and sometimes, Jessie, I am dreadfully afraid that when my darling comes to heaven's gate at last, and her Father asks, 'My child, did you give your heart to me down on earth?' my poor child will have to say, 'O Lord, I always meant to; I was going to when the pale angel took me away.' Then he would have to say, 'Inasmuch as you did it not, depart!'"

The last words sank to a whisper, and Jessie felt hot tears drop on her head.

She sank down on her knees and prayed earnestly.

"O Lord Jesus, please cure me of my naughty fault. Make me do the right the first minute, without waiting to be just going to. 'Dear Heavenly Father, take my heart now, for Christ's sake. Amen.'"

CHILDREN'S TEETHING. An experienced Nurse and Female Physician, presents to the attention of mothers, her

SOOTHING SYRUP, For Children Teething, which greatly facilitates the process of teething, by softening the gums, relieving all inflammation, will allay all pain and spasmodic action, and is SURE TO REGULATE THE BOWELS. Depend upon it mothers, it will give rest to yourselves, and RELIEF AND HEALTH TO YOUR INFANTS.

We have put up and sold this article for over thirty years, and can say, in confidence and truth of it, what we have never been able to say of any other medicine. NEVER HAS IT FAILED, IN A SINGLE INSTANCE, TO EFFECT A CURE, when timely used. Never did we know an instance of dissatisfaction, by any one who used it, on the contrary, all are delighted with its operations, and speak in terms of highest commendation of its magical effects and medicinal virtues. We speak in this matter, and pledge our reputation for its efficacy, on the ground of what we here declare. In exhaustion, relief will be found in fifteen or twenty minutes after the syrup is administered.

This valuable preparation is the prescription of one of the most EXPERIENCED and SKILLFUL NURSES in New England, and has been used with never failing success in

THOUSANDS OF CASES. It not only relieves the child from pain, but invigorates the stomach and bowels, corrects acidity, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. It will almost instantly relieve the child of the most distressing symptoms of teething, and overcome convulsions, which, if not speedily remedied, end in death. We believe it the best and surest remedy in the world in all cases of Dysentery and Diarrhoea in Children, whether it arises from teething or from any other cause. We would say to every mother who has a child suffering from any of the foregoing complaints, Do not let your prejudice, nor any prejudicial notions, stand between your suffering child and the relief that will be sure, yes, absolutely sure, to follow the use of this medicine, if timely used. None genuine unless the fac-simile of CURTIS & FELLOWS, No. 45, is on the outside wrapper. Sold by Druggists throughout the world.

Price only 35 cents per Bottle.
