By the Author of "Violet Vanghan," "Sir Julian's Wife," "St. Beetha's," &c. "So He bringeth them unto their desired, haven."-(Continued.)

Silently I followed Sibyl to the schoolroom, being conscious all the while that I should cut but a very indifferent figure before the governess and the cousins to whom I was about to be introduced; for the traces of tears were still upon my face, and the hurry, and travel, and annoyances of the last few days, not to speak of the real misery I had endured, had banished all my roses, and dimmed my eyes, and given to my countenance a heavy, hopeless, not to say stupid expression. I should have liked to retire to my attic, in order to make a little toilet before any further presentations took place, but I felt afraid of Sibyl, who walked on before me without uttering a single word or deigning a backward glance; and the courage which had sustained me in the beginning of that morning's conversation had very nearly deserted me and was still sinking and sinking, as with aching heart I contemplated the unpromising future of my life at Crofton Lawn.

I began to feel like a wild bird whose wings have been clipped: I had never been accustomed to much control, and the restraints which would certainly be imposed upon me here I regarded as almost unendurable. I hated the very name of Cotswoldbury, and I longed to fly away,—that is, in plain parlance, "run away;" only I had not the remotest notion where to run to; I could not get back to St. Eldred's without begging my way, which might be romantic, but would certainly be unpleasant; and I could not hope that Cecilia Churchman would be allowed to receive me, however earnestly she might have wished it. Ah, discipline is very hard to bear !- and yet there comes to every one a season when it must be borne. Happy they who bear the voke in their youth, and bear it patiently, and even thankfully, knowing at last, that " no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievons ; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable truit of righteousness unto them which are exer-

We traversed several passages, and at last stopped before a baize-covered door, at the end of an broad gallery. Sibyl turned round then, and, with the air of a young princess, signified by an imperious gesture of her hand that I was to enter with her. In another moment I found myself standing behind her, in a large, plea sant room, that seemed to be a compound of library, boudoir, and study. There were maps and drawings upon the wall, and there were several book-cases, and some hanging shelves, amply furnished. Two handsome globes occupied the two opposite corners, a square piano filled a snug recess, and the usual furniture of an ordinary sitting-room completed the picture upon which I gazed. But just then, though I took in at a glance the whole aspect of the place, my attention was concentrated in the people who occupied the room. At the head of a table near the fire, her open desk before her, and pen in hand, sat a lady, decidedly not handsome, not distinguishedlooking, and no longer young. I thought her then quite an elderly person, well stricken in years; she was really about forty years of age, which seems old indeed to juveniles of fifteen and thereabouts. Now, having myself reached that A venerable term of years, I feel myself not old at all, and, I am ashamed to say, scarcely elderly.

Miss Hollingsworth looked up brightly as we entered :- I had never seen a sweeter face than that which questioningly, and yeakindly, sought mine; it was beautiful to me, infinitely more so than the delicately-tinted, classically-featured face of the beautiful Sibyl; and yet my consin's countenance was faultless in symmetry, outline, and complexion; it only needed expression. Whereas. Miss Hollingsworth had lost her youthful lilies and roses, if, indeed, she ever possessed any; she had an ugly nose, of a decidedly snub character. and there was a scar on her right cheek, which alone was a disfigurement. But there was good sense and there was tenderness in the lines of her mouth: there was a decision in the firm, square chin, and a world of purity and kindliness in her clear, grey, lustrons eyes, - eyes that seemed to read your very soul with their soft yet steady gaze, yet eyes that told of a thousand beautiful things, and, in their silent eloquence, spoke volumes of truth, and goodness, and wisdom, and all sweet, womanly affections.

Sibyl said haughtily enough, " Miss Hollingsworth, I have brought you Margaret Torrington; and mamma wishes to know if you can spare Fanny and Bella in half an hour, -she wishes them to drive with her."

"Fanny can go, certainly," returned Miss Hollingsworth,-" she has nearly finished her morning's duties; but Bella has been so idle, that I tear she will have to forego the pleasure." "That means, of course, that you refuse to let her go ?" returned Sibyl sneeringly. "Bella knows my rules," replied Miss Hollingsworth steadily. " Duty is our first consideration, and she has no more work to do from day to day than she can easily accomplish. I am sorry that she wastes so much time as frequently to get into arrears. This morning she has done literally nothing; it will therefore be impossible for her to conclude her regular lessons much before the early dinner." Bella and Fanny were evidently twins, being precisely of a size and being so much alike that wondered whether I should ever be able to distinguish one from another. I knew now which was Bella, because she sat with lowering countenance, scribbling over the back of her exercisebook, while Fanny looked up with alarcity and replied that she would be quite ready at the time appointed. The other occupants of the room were three in number. A tall girl, looking nearly as old as Sibyl, and very nearly as beautiful, was bending over some German books; another girl of eleven or thereabonts was busy with pencil-drawing; and on a mattressed reclining-board lay a pale, slight child, with fair, wavy hair and light blue eyes. I could see at a glance that she was deformed and that she looked ill, weary and miserable. She seemed younger than her sister, who was perpetrating a series of arches most frightfully out of the perpendicular; but I afterwards found that she was three years older, being almost fourteen, while the twins were sixteen, and Leonora, the eldest of Miss Hollingsworth's pupils, was in her eighteenth year.

As I soon afterwards discovered, Leonora was mort anxious to escape from the school-room.

Miss Hollingsworth was quite willing to dispense with her society. Mr. and Mrs. Crofton did not object to accept the young lady as grown up; they would have permitted her to share in all the onours and privileges of her elder sister had not Sibyl herself strengously declaimed. She vio-lently protested against Nora's introduction, averring that one Miss Crof on at a time was quite and that Nora must not think of coming out while she was still unmarried, or, at least, disengaged; while Nera, on her part, very naturally resented her sister's interference, and pined for the liberty which was certainly her due, and also

COMMON SENSE VIEW OF THE MODE IN WHICH Hostetter's

STOMACH BITTERS ACT UPON THE HUMAN SYSTEM.

THIS is an age of inquiry. People want to know the why and wherefore of all statements submitted to them as facts, and as far as this GREAT PROTECTIVE AND INVIGORANT is concerned, it is proposed to gratify them.

All the physicians admit that the greatest difficulty they encounter in their practice is in conveying to the seat of the disease the medicament that will counteract and neutralize it. Electricity has been tried for this purpose, but it is now generally admitted that the electric fluid is too subtle an agent to be made the vehicle of medication. It shocks the nerves, but cannot distribute through the system anything except itself. Medicated electricity is, in short, an exploited humbug. But a liquid stimulant, as everybody knows, can be charged with the essential properties of any and every substance in the Materia Medica, and there is io herbial extract which it will not hold in solution, with all its preventive and curative virtues unim-

Now the pure liquid stimulant of which Hostetter's Bitters are in part composed, is charged with invaluable vegetable remedies; and these, by reason of its powerful diffusive principle, it conveys to every organ and introduces into the circulation. To use a common expression, it goes to the spot, taking with it just what is wanted there. The Essence of kye would undoubtedly diffuse itself through the organization as swiftly if administered pure and simple, as if mixed with the juices of tonic and alterative roots, barks and herbs. But of what use would it be without their healing, strengthening, life sustaining balm? It would merely excite. It could neither protect nor cure. And herein hes the essential difference between the effect of the purest stimulant when given alone, and the same stimulant when administered in the medicinal form of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. Good monongabela spirit is doubtless the mildest and most innocuous of all the varieties of liquor, but it only becomes a healthful medicine when impregnated with the vegetable elements employed in the preparation of the Bitters.

TO DYSPEPTIC SUFFERERS. Under the general head of Dyspepsia may be classed all the varieties of Indigestion. Its symptoms are solvations, and differ so much in different individuals, that it is aimost impossible to classify them. In fact, some of them are indescribable. It may be safely asserted, however, that half of the diseases of mankind spring from a disordered state of the stomach; and that the other half, whatever their origin, react upon that sensitive and important organ. Among the ordinary indications of Dyspepsia are flatulence, a bloated and furl feeling about the stomach and abdomen immediately after eating, a gnawing sensition, or a sense of hollowness at the pit of the stomach between meals, a doll heavy feeling in the head, feeble or unsteady appetite, occarional nausea, restlessness during the night, and a weary, unrefreshed feeling on rising in the meruing, palpitation of the heart, depression of mind, sometimes amounting to monomania, loss of memory, confusion of thought, sour stomach, with raising of food, and a choking sensition in the throat, dimness of the eye, pain in the diaphragm, feebleness and disinclination for exertion, and sometimes emaciation and a corpse-like pallor. These are a few of the direct signs of Dyspepsia, but as it is generally complicated with specific affections of the bowels, the tiver and the nerves, its victims have many additional torments, which are technically attributed to other causes.

The best advice that can be given to any one who has the of the stomach; and that the other half, whatever their The best advice that can be given to any one who has the slightest predisposition to Dyspepsia, is to fortify his or her degestive organs by the daily use of The disease proceeds from a lack of vigor in the stomach, and this vitalizing preparation will tone and renovate that organ. If the gastric apparatus is in good working order, and can perfectly dissolve and thoroughly assimilate the food submitted to its operation, there will be no dyspepsia. It it cannot do this, it requires reinforcement, and the best of all reinforcing sigents should be forthwith resorted to. The stomach is the commissary of the system. It supplies the elements of life to the whole body. In it is prepared the material of blood, muscle, bone and fibre, and if it fails to purvey that material in sufficient quantity and of a proper kind, the whole body stiffers, and with it the mental faculties. Therefore protect the "Commissary Department." Don't let the enemy obtain possession of it. It is easier to prevent disease from getting into an organ, than to expel it after it becomes a chronic fixture. Consider the first indication of uneasiness in the stomach as a sign that dyspep its is preparing to attack, and buffle it at once with this great repellant.

But if it is too late to prevent, remember that it is not HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.

This belief is grounded on twelve years' experience of the efficacy of the preparation. The first instance of its fallur to give relief is yet anchronicled. If it ever had failed, the voluminous correspondence addressed to the proprietor from all parts of the United States and South America would at least include one letter expressing dissatisfaction but no, there is not one! The testimony, extending over a period of more than a dozen years, is all of the same approving tenor. Certainly this is a sufficient warrant for claiming that the BITTERS are a SPECIFIC FOR INDIGESTION, IN ALL ITS VARIETIES.

THE subscriber respectfully begs to direct the attention of the public to the Studio which he has recently opened, and feels justified in assuring the citizens of St.
John that he can produce thoroughly satisfactory LIKENESSES. He is prepared to execute either ordinary Cartes de Visites, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes, or life sized Photographs in Oil, which latter being in finish equa to Oil Painting, are much more faithful as Likenesses.
Parties having miniatures or faded Likenesses of deceased friends and relations, and wishing to have the same enlarged into life-sized Photographs in Oil, would find it to their advantage to call upon him,
