MARGARET TORRINGTON : OR, THE VOYAGE OF LIFE. By the Author of "Violet Vaughan," "Sir Julian's Wife," "St. Beetha's," &c.

So He bringeth them unto their desired haven."-PSALM CVII. 30.

GUSSLE.

And, seeing no probability of my presence being required by the heads of the household, to bed I resolved to betake myslf as soon as ever I could assure myself that Miss Gussie had fallen asleep. And so, a little after nine, just as nurse and Rebecca were sitting down to their bread and cheese and ale, I went to my room, wearied out and dispirited, and wondering what the morrow would bring forth. Youthful sorrow rarely watches in the night-time, and mine soon faded into indistinct remembrances of the journey, of Cecilia Churchman, of Clara Berners, of the old time at Kelver House, till memories became dreams, and I was as fast asleep as the terrible child in the little bed, with her head hanging out at the feet, and her toes perched insanely on the pillow.

It was still early when my dreams began to partake of the nature of nightmare !-- I was hunted by a crazy bull, I was fleeing before the high tide, yet unable to move my heavy limbs more quickly than an inch per minute! I was escaping from fierce robbers, and could not get down the stairs ; I was seized with supernatural terrors, and could not leave the haunted room ; finally I heard my father calling me, and I could not rise and go,-a heavy hand held me down, an icy touch congealed my blood, and I lay panting and struggling for breath and freedom. By-and by I really awoke, and could just see the glimmering square of the window, and slowly the horrible truth dawned upon me, that something actually sat upon me,--something ponderous enough and cold enough,-something, too, that chuckled horribly, now tittering quietly, and now indulging in a low but hearty cackling laugh My first sensations were of unmitigated horror, my first impulse was to shriek aloud for aid ; but a moment's reflection convinced me that I need not terrify myself, although I had abandant reason for disquietude. My nightmare was evidently the goblin-child herself, who had perched upon my chest, and was indulging in all sorts of queer sibilations and horrible cachinnations, probably with a view to my extreme discomfiture.

As soon as I was certified to the nature of my nightmare, I began to consider how I should act in order to free myself from the living incubus, poking at me with its lean, long fingers, and digging into my sides with its sharp, bony heels ! After a moment's reflection I said authoritatively, "Go away, Gussie,--- to your own bed."

" He ! he ! he !" shrieked the child, pressing upon me so heavily that I could scarcely breathe. " Will you go ?" I said once more, in a tone that might have sobered a more reasonable creature ; and still there came the same response -a stronger sense of suffocation, and that unearthly " He, he, he !" that froze my blood in spite of my anger, and drove me almost to desperation and despair. But in a moment my resolution was taken. If she were not a veritable goblin, I must be stronger than she, and if it came to a trial of mere strength, I must be the conqueror. Very determinately I took her by the arms, and calmly, but with unfaltering hand, moved her from her position and set her upon the floor. She flew at me, and aimed a furious blow, but in the uncertain light she missed her aim, and struck herself violently against the wall. Again I took hold of her, and led, or rather carried her struggling to her bed, and after a scramble, in which my nightgown was torn, I had the satisfaction of seeing her laid between the sheets in the proper and legitimate fashion. But my triumph was of short duration ; directly she was free she sprang up and assailed me furiously, gibbering away in her passion like an insane creature, aud "nipping" at my arms, as Cuddie had told me she would if I at all displeased her. Now, I was not used to being beaten and nipped, and I had a spirit as high as was ever possessed by any girl of fifteen and three months, and it was effectually roused now. One " nip" was considerably sharper than the rest ; in fact, the sudden pain forced from me an involuntary scream, and without a moment's thought. I seized Miss Gassie with the very arm she had just attacked, and with the other gave her a thorough good beating. For a moment all was still: she was trying to bite me, but she did not try to return my chastisement, neither did she make any noise. But, as I presently found, she was breathless with rage, and when I laid her down again, and said, "There, you naughty girl, that is how I serve children who pinch and bite." she set up a succession of such piercing screams that in self defence I put my hands to my ears; I had never heard anything so dreadful, so unearthly ! I can only compare the sounds she made to the yelling of a railway engine when it is approaching some station through which it is about to pass at express speed ! "Hush, hush !" I cried as each successive shrick rose higher and was more prolonged ; " you will rouse the house !"-which was precisely what she wished to do, and what to some extent she succeeded in doing pretty quickly. I soon heard doors open and shut, and footsteps in the passage, and then nurse came in with a light, and discovered us both pale with passion, and torn with the conflict that had raged ! My nightcap was off -we did not wear nets in those days,-there was a rent in the sleeve of my nightdress, and my arm was bleeding from the very effective nip I had sustained. Gussie's grey eves were gleam-ing with fury, her lack bair hung all about her ers, and her cars and arms were as red as her face was white with the publishment I had indicted. "She's beaten me !" shrieked Gusste, rocking herself on the pillow ; " ob, I'll tell mamma! She wou't have any of us beaten by a beg garly cousin that's too poor to pay for her board and education." That sentence stung me to the quick, for I knew the child must have heard it from her mother or elder sisters; she was only repeating like a par-rot the cruci words she had caught up. " Indeed," said nurse, " I'm afraid there'll be a nss, Miss Torrington. Missns won't have one of them touched ; the last under nurse was turned away because she hit Miss Gussie one day when mortal flesh and blood could bear no more." I thought I should not care if I were turned I thought I should not care if I were turned away—at least I could go out to service, and it seemed to service I was doomed at Crofton Lawn. But I was sorry this fracas had arisen at the very outset of my residence in the family, and before I had seen my aunt. However, I drew up my dilapidated sleeve, and pointed to my arm, now purple and swelled, and bearing most visibly the marks of Gussie's nails. "Laws, miss!" said Rebecca significantly, "we all have to put up with that; only Miss Hollings-worth won't have it, and so Miss Gussie's turned out of the school-room. I am sure I never see such a limb; sometimes I don't believe she is made of the same stuff as other children—least-chairs and tables, ugly whitewashed walls, and carpetless floors? I had not been bred luxuriously, and I was young and healthy, and I could have been happy in my out-of-the-way garret if only it had been all my own-if only I might have hoped for justice and common kindness, for a little sympathy sometimes, and for some amount of consideration in the family circle.

Intuitively I felt that I need not anticipate any such good fortune, and I felt that, at the very outset of my career, I had unhappily distinguished myself in a way that would scarcely commend me to the general favour. Nurse did not conceal from me that "I was in a scrape." She didn't wonder, she said; "but I must learn to keep my hands off them"-meaning Cuddie and Angusta.

About 10 o'clock I received a summons to the breakfast-room. My aunt and uncle were there. l learned, ready to receive me, and I followed the messenger with trembling limbs and a heart beating high with excitcment, dread, and indignation. Was this the way people commonly received their orphan nieces ?

OF THE MODE IN WHICH Hostetter's STOMACH BITTERS

ACT UPON THE HUMAN SYSTEM.

THIS is an age of inquiry. People want to know the wby and wherefore of all statements submitted to them facts, and as far as this GREAT PROTECTIVE AND INVIGORANT concerned, it is proposed to gratify them. All the physicians admit that the greatest difficulty they encounter in their practice is in conveying to the seat of the disease the medicament that will counteract and neu-tralize it. Electricity has been tried for this purpose, but it is now generally admitted that the electric fluid is too subtle an agent to be made the vehicle of medication. It subtle an agent to be made the vehicle of medication. It shocks the nerves, but cannot distribute through the sys-tem anything except itself. Medicated electricity is, in short, an exploded humbug. But a liquid stimulant, as everybody knows, can be charged with the essential pro-perties of any and every substance in the Meteria. Medica, and there is no herbial extract which it will not hold in so-lation with all its presentive and current in solution, with all its preventive and curative virtues unimpaired

Now the pure liquid stimulant of which Hostetter's Bitters are in part composed, is charged with invaluable vegetable remedies; and these, by reason of its powerful diffusive principle, it conveys to every organ and introduces into the principle, it conveys to every organ and introduces into the circulation. To use a common expression, it goes to the spot, taking with it just what is wanted there. The Es-sence of Kye would undoubtedly diffuse itself through the organization as swithly if administered nure and sim-ple, as if mixed with the juces of tone and alterative roots, barks and herbs. But of what use would it be with out their healing, strengthening, life sustaining balm? It would merely excite. It could neither protect her fleet of the nurses the same And the purest stimulant when given alone, and the same stimulant when administered in the medicing form of HOSTETTERS STOMACH BITTERS.

Good monongunela spirit is doubless the mildest and most innoucous of all the varieties of liquor, but it only becomes a healthful medicine when im regnated with the vegetable elements employed in the preparation of the Bitters.

TO DYSPEPTIC SUFFERERS.

Under the general head of Dyspepsir may be classed all he varieties of indigestion. Its symptoms are so various, and differ so much in different individuals, that it is aimost impossible to classify them. In fact, some of them are in-describable. It may be safely asserted, however, that half of the stomach; and that the other half, whatever their of the diseases of maukind spring from a disordered state of the stomach, and that the other half, whatever their origin, react upon that sensitive and important organ. Among the ordinary iodications of Dyspepsia are flatulence, a bloated and fail feeling about the stomach and abdomen immediately after eating, a gnawing sensation, or a sense of hollowness at the pit of the stomach between meels, a dull heavy feeling in the head, feeble or unsteady appetite, occa-ional nausea, restlessness during the night, and a weary, unrefreshed feeling on rising in the morning, palpi-tation of the heart, depression of mind, sometimes amount-ing to monomania, loss of memory, confusion of thought, sour stomach, with raising of food, and a choking sensa-tion in the throut, dimness of the eye, pain in the diaph-r gm, feebleness and disinclination for exertion, and aom-times emaciation and acorpse-like pallor. These are a tew of the direct signs of Dyspepsia, but as it is generally com-plicated with specific affections of the bowels, the liver and the nerves, its victims have many additional torments, which are technically attributed to other cases. The best advice that can be given to any one who has the slightest predisposition to Dyspepsia, is to fortify his or her digestive organs by the daily use of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

HOSTETTER'S BITTERS. The disease proceeds from a lack of vigor in the stomach, and this vitalizing preparation will tone and renovate that organ. If the gastric apparatus is in good working order, and can perfectly dissolve and thoroughly assimilate the food subonited to its operation, there will be no dyspepsia. If it cannot do this, it requires reinforcement, and the best of all reinforcing agents should be forthwith resorted to. The stomach is the commissary of the system. It supplies the elements of life to the whole body. In it is prepared to purvey that material in sufficient quantity and of a prepared the material of blood, muscle, bone and fibre, and if it fails to purvey that material in sufficient quantity and of a prepared the disease from getting into an orgin, than to expel it after it becomes a chronic ficture. Consider the first indi-eation of uneasiness in the stomach as a sign that dyspepsia is preparing to sitack, and balle it at once with this great replicate. But if it is too late to prevent, remember that it is not

But if it is too late to prevent, remember that it is to late to cure. It is believed that there is no case of of ic indigestion that can withstand the remedial operatio
