(From the Christian World.) MARGARET TORRINGTON: OR, THE VOYAGE OF LIFE.

the Author of "Violet Vaughan," " Sir Julian's Wife," " St. Beetha's," de. bringeth them unto their desired haven."-PSALM CVII. 30. (Continued.)

AN OPPORTUNE MEETING.

The autumn evening was fast closing in when I reached the station, and it suddenly occurred to me that, unless the trains matched well, I should arrive at Cotswoldbury in the middle of the night. I had always travelled with my cousins first-class, as a matter of course; but now it would have been but a measure of prudence had I chosen the lowest fare of all. I was too much pre-occupied, however, to think as yet about economic measures-my only anxiety was to get away from Cleeve super-Mare as fast as possible therefore, I asked hurriedly for my ticket, paid for it without counting the change, and rushed into the first empty compartment of a first-class carriage which came in my way. It was a wonder that I took the right train; but, happily for me, there was no amalgamation on the short loopline, and I could scarcely go wrong till I got to Bristol. Otherwise, I should doubtless have found myself flying at express speed towards the Land's End, rather than to Cotswoldbury.

Before I had at all composed myself, the train stopped at Yaxley Junction, and the porters were crying out " All change here," &c., and I knew that I had performed the first stage of my journey. Another train was in readiness to take us up, and, being rather behind time, and the railway officials in an unamiable state of mind, we were hurried into our places without any choice of our own; I, especially, being slightly dis-tranght, and, of course, atterly undecided as to the next step I should take, was accosted most unceremoniously by the guard,

" Now then, Miss! Going on ?" "Yes; to Cotswoldbury,-that is, to Bristol."

" What class?" I showed my ticket, and was hoisted into a carriage close at hand, very much as if I had been a stupid child. The door was banged-to, the signal given, and the train was once more upon its way. Then I saw I had companions - a gentleman and a lady; but the light depending from the roof of the compartment was so dim that I could discern little beyond the outline of their figures, though gradually I made out that the gentleman was elderly and in clerical attire, and that the lady was rather fashionably dressed in deepest mourning. And, having unconsciously, as it were, ascertained so much, I thought no more own great sorrow to care about surroundings,- about them, being too much absorbed in my whether animate or otherwise. Slowly I was beginting to realize the fact that I had by my own act and deed divided myself for ever from Gilbert. Had I really done well? Had I not acted, as I too often did, from mere impulse? Had I not failed to ask guidance in this most important epoch of my life ? Yes, truly ; I had rushed away without taking counsel of any human creature. That, however, was not of so much import; for does it not happen in all lives that crises arrive when one must depend sole!y on one's own self for support and for advice, - when one can admit no confidant, no sharer in perplexity ! It does, indeed, so happen, as most elderly people who read these pages will unhesitatingly say; but when they, in their day of loneliness and bewilderment, perhaps sought the ear of their Almighty Friend, who is always to be trusted, who is always ready to attend even to the unuttered plaint of the miserable one, who will certainly lead the baffled wanderer into paths of safety, and guide the tempesttossed into the haven. I had not committed my cause to Him who is the Father of the fatherless : I had not said to Him, " Show me the right path, lead me in the way wherein I should go; had not trusted for direction : I had relied en tirely on myself; and that on the impnise of the hour, not after grave reflection. Still, I came to the conclusion that so far I was right. I knew I should never have persisted in renouncing Gilbert if he had been at my side to plead for himself; I knew that he would have despised the great advantages his patron promised him while they were the concomitants of such a sacrifice :knew that he would have remained faithful to me at any risk; but had I not thus renounced him. would be not have suffered in the days to come? would not those dear ones at St. Eldred's have suffered also? Yes; it was well that we should part: he would think so in due time. And I, who had not prayed for myself, prayed carnestly for him that he might be comforted now and made happy presently. My flight would give him pain — And then a horrible idea took possession of my mind; might it not be misrepresented to him? might be not be convinced that I really was un-worthy of his love? The dread of this possible misfortune, which had not occurred to me before, almost took away my senses, and I leaned back on the cushions, the tears streaming down my cheeks in the friendly darkness, and the lumbering of the train drowning the sobs that else would have been quite audible to my fellow-passengers; and then I cried from the depths of my heart, -O, my God! let it not be so. From this last anguish, good Lord, deliver me; take care of Thy poor wayward child, and guide her safe among the shoals and quicksands that beset her course. O Lord, she is friendless and alone; be Thou her

Already the lights of Clifton were twinkling on the rocky heights across the river, already we were in the suburbs of Bristol, when I noticed that the young lady was looking at me very carnestly, and I started and drew my blue veil closer, for I did not wish to be recognized by any chance acquaintance : and, dim as was the flickering oillamp, and misty as were my eyes with tears, I yet thought I discerned through the folds of gauze before my face a form and an attitude not altogether unfamiliar. While I was trying to think where I could have met the lady before, her companion's face was entirely shrouded from my view, for he lay back deep in shadow, and a travelling cap with lappets served sufficiently to disguise him had he been an intimate. The train stopped, and the young lady started up to look for the tickets which were committed to her care. Theu I was sure I knew her. Was it could it be-Cecilia Churchman, with whom I still carried on a lagging correspondence, fast dy-ing out for want of mutual interests? We had never seen each other since, after our hasty vows of friendship, we had parted at the coach office several years before; and, though we had at first written foolish, impassioned letters full of loves and protestations, and though we had duly discussed our grievances, and poured ont our sorrow into each other's sympathising bosoms, the time soon came when Ic cared little for a letter from Cecilia, and hers, by their increasing brevity and unfrequency, proved that our silly love at first sight was fast dying out from lack of nour-ishment. While I was still undecided she spoke to me : " You are alone ! Can we help you with your luggage? Are you going further on?"

It was Occilia; there was no mistaking her rapid tones and rather abrupt address; and before I could answer intelligibly, she had seized my hand, exclaiming, "I was sure of it! I knew friend, her helper, and her comforter."

I showed you some ornaments of mine. As soon as ever I caught sight of the diamond sparkling through the semi darkness, I made up my mind ! I knew who you were, but I determined to hear your voice before I claimed acquaintance."

Then followed a long string of questions,which I found it difficult to answer. I told Cecilia and her father-for he too turned inquisitor, and tormented me not a little-that I had been at Cleeve-super-Mare with my uncle's family, that I was going to Cotswoldbury at once, and then proceeding " to London, in order to take a situ-

"What an independent girl you are I" said Cealia; "but it must be very pleasant to be thrown entirely on one's own resources, I should think." I shivered, and thought how little she knew about it. Mr. Charchman remarked that Mrs. Profton ought not to have permitted me to travel ov so late a train, since I was unaccompanied.

Would anyone meet me at Bristol? " No! I was going on immediately." "I doubt whether there will be a train," said Mr. Churchman; and, indeed, when the question ame to be asked on the Bristol platform, it proed that there would be no train till past ten, and hat I should, consequently, arrive at Cotswoldoury about midnight. All at once I felt in how officult a position I was placed. What could I ay in order to explain my sudden appearance at so unreasonable an hour? Already I began to ee how much I risked in accomplishing this, as seemed to me, necessary evasion.

" Go on to Cotswoldbury to-night !" cried Cecilia in her excited way. " Are you on an errand of life and death, Mangaret ! No? Well, then, you shall do as you did before, spend, the ight with us at Kingsdown, and go on your ourney as soon as you like to morrow morning. The coach has ceased to run to Westonbury, now, ou know, and there are plenty of trains to hoose from. What packages have you ? They may as well remain here, unless you think better it, and stay a few days with me. What do you-

"I would rather go on at once, if von please. Perhaps Mrs. Churchman may consider it a librty; and perhaps -"

" Mrs. Churchman! Have you not heard ?-Did I not write? Well, I really thought I did. And so you do not know that Mrs. Churchman is, -well-gone to glory, or else the other way."

She stopped short, seeing me look extremely hocked, not at the news of the poor drab lady's lecease, but at the dreadful irreverence of her tep daughter. Cecilia was greatly changed, I hought, and for the worse. Still, it seemed to ne, under the circumstances, that the best thing could do was to accept her invitation, provided per father did not disapprove. He was at some listance from us, solemely haranguing the porers, and shaking his head in the direction of the uggage-van. Smely, this unforeseen meeting was providentially ordered; for here was protection the most undeniable respectability; it could not be brought against me that I was wandering about in the dark hours without suitable escort, if I went home with Mr. Churchman and his laughter, and on the morrow I could reach Cotswoldbury easily by daylight, and not excite any undne astonishment. Also, in case of misrepresentation, which more and more I felt I had to expect from Sibyl, and perhaps from Tom, there were two persons to whom reference could be made as to my fourney so far; and, besides, I should have a few - hours to recruit my strength, and to decide more clearly on my fature course.

So, when Mr. Churchman formally, but still kindly, seconded his daughter's request, adding that he could not answer for it to his conscience that this was an interposition of Providence on my behalf, and I gratefully thanked him and Ceeilia, and, after seeing my lbggage stowed away in the cloak room, accompanied them to the fly which was waiting for ns.

Once more I was rattled down the dreary ength of Temple-street, across Bristol-bridge, brough the aitiquated city, and up the hill which led to the seemingly inaccessible cyric of Kingsdown. It seemed but the other day since, in company with the elderly gentleman now beside. me. I had made the self-same journey; but then I was a child comparatively sonow I was a woman, with all a woman's cares, and griefs, and perplexities - beset, too, by perils which as vet I only dimly comprehended. Oh! how I longed for some safe haven, for some secure abode, where I might rest my weariness, where I might hide myself away from the strife of tongnes, from all unkindness, all cruel slander, and especially from the aching pain for which I knew ao remedy. I must bear it, and be brave; that was all. But could I bear it long? Twenty-four hours ago 1 was happy in spite of all inimical surroundings; for my toture and Gilbert's were to be one. Now hev must for ever be dissociated : my very love for him demanded that it should be so.

Slowly we would up the steep slope of the Horfield-to d, and very soon we were stopping before the highly-respectable dark green door in the high stone wall I so well remembered. And Cecilia, not waiting for assistance, sprang out and fulled the bell, exclaiming with delight at being her journey's end - at home! Oh! when should I be "at home?" What should I find at my

I followed Miss Churchman into the drab-cooured drawing-room, where no longer sat any drab coloured matron nursing a cat of the same dull hue, and reading, with solemn air, the Record newspaper! Under Cecilia's rule the room had somewhat changed its character-its prevailing tint of drabness was gone, there were green and amber shades in the carpet, the hearth rug was all roses and lilies and tern leaves, and on it reposed a sleek tortoiseshell passy, much handsomer than her favoured predecessor.

"You see I have made some alterations," said Cecilia, when we were up-stairs, taking off our bonnets: " a new carpet was really wanted, and I bought one -not gaudy, of course, but lively, and of a good pattern; and papa said it was worldly; but he did not see it till it was down, and then, of course, it could not be altered; and by-and-by he came to like it, and then I got the hearthrug, and some pretty chimney ornaments. Now I am going in for suitable window-drapery; and before the winter is over I shall have the spare bedroom entirely re-furnished. And when my mourning is over, will I not dress to please myself! How long ought one to wear mourning for a step-mother,

"I have no idea," I replied wearily. Oh !how foolish, how little, seemed to me all this babble about curtains and carpets, and new fur-

" How long has Mrs. Churchman been dead?" I asked presently; not that I cared to know, but I felt it was not right to be Cecilia's guest, and maintain the silence I so longed for.

" Let me see! Three-four months nearly ;she died in June. Bless me! I wonder if she is happy where she is gone !" (To be Continued.)

OBSERVE THE NAME.

IT is well at all times to call things each by their own proper names, otherwise you may not get what you want. When you desire to have the best Coal Oil, that which is made from Albert Coal, and manufactured in this Province, ask app "ALBERTINE OIL." Should you call for it by some other name, where the genuine article is not Albertine Oil has no bad odor, will burn to the last drop in the lamp without depreciation of light, and gives universal satisfaction.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due. It has been said by a few unfortunate mortals who have striven in vain to gain position of honor and distinction, that they were not sufficiently appreciated. While such may sometimes be the case, it is generally to be observed that true deserving worth is cordially accepted and honored whether applied to religion, politics, the arts, or invention.

Next to religion, invention or discovery has the bighest position, for it wields a mighty influence; through its channels nations have overleaped, as by magic, the bounds of separation, and, united by electric wires, can converse together at momentary will.

Indeed, the diversified efforts of man's genius in these respects are a source of admiration and gratitude to the whole human race. In medicine, science has revealed dur ing the last quarter of a century, many bidden truths which had before been considered to be impossibilities.-The melignity of pestilential disease is now in a great measure bereit of its terror, and even the "institute archer," consumption, is arrested in his deadly march, and oftentimes overthrown. Undoubtedly the great rullying power in the treatment of this and other pulmonar, diseases, is Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry; and the foregoing allusions are applicable to the memory of its illustrious discoverer. The proof of the efficacy of this grea remedy is in its undying reputation. It has stood the test of time, and its tame as a curative of Throat and Long Complaints has extended to all climes.—Canada Christian

TAKE great pleasure in recommending to my friends in Nova Scotia and New Branswick the Boys Boarding School of Mr. Cherbuliez. I know him as a bighly cultivated gentleman and an accomplished and skilful teacher.—He is a Swiss Protestant, but long resident in this country, and for 17 years he has been connected with Pelham Priorry, which is no small recommendation. His school offers superior advantages for acquiring a skilful knowledge of the French language.
