(From the Christian World.) MARGARET TORRINGTON ; OR, THE VOYAGE OF LIFE.

Author of "Violet Vaughan," "Sir Julian's Wife," "St. Beetha's," &c.

SENT TO COVENTRY.

" And, Margaret, I mean to be good now. We had a talk this morning in the wood. First of all, we talked about you ; and I told him that it was all nonsense about your marrying Tom, and he said he did not care for Sibyl-at least, not in that way, you know ; and then we talked about the end of life."

"What do you mean ?" "He said our lives were like the rivers, that trickle down at first among the hills, and then grow deeper and broader as they roll through fields and pass by towns, till at last they find their way into the great sea, and are lost to sight. So, he said we were going on—on, always onwards, till we came to the wide ocean of eternity; and he asked what I thought eternity would be like, and I said I supposed it would be heaven; and then he asked me if I were going there, and I said I didn't know ; and then he said-oh ! he said a lot of things, Margaret, and I made up my mind that I would be good."

"I think you are very good now, Gussie." "I am good to you, Margaret, because 1 love you; and I am better than I used to be to others, because I am ashamed of my old ways. But that is not the right sort of goodness.' " Not the goodness that will take you to heaven, you mean ?" "No goodness of any sort will take me to heaven, Margaret. I am rather in a puzzle yet ;---I must talk to Gilbert again. I think I understand it myself how it is, but I could not tell it to any one. But it is just the same as Mr. and Mrs. North always say. Ard-oh ! hadn't you better go to sleep ? You will have a headache again to-morrow.

It would be well for me, I thought, if my headache were not supplemented by a heart-ache on the morrow ; for the more I thought about the fairy-land I had pictured before tea, the more indistinct it grew, and the dimmer and feebler became the hopes I had so sweetly entertained. I kissed Gussie, and we exchanged "Good nights," and in a minute afterwards I knew by her quiet breathing that she was sound asleep. Happy child ! to have no cares, no perplexities, no apprehensions to banish sweet repose. How long ago it seemed since I had slumbered so placidly, knowing only the bright dreams of childhood !

I lay awake long after all the house was still I heard Tom go shuffling along in his slippers to his room, I heard other footsteps on the landing, I heard doors open and shut, and then all was silent ; only the rising wind moaned without, and mingled its low, plaintive music with the monotonous murmur of the waves. I was too excited to sleep, and tossed about wearily till the grey dawn stole in, telling me that the day which must decide my fate had commenced already. I slept at last the heavy sleep of utter weariness and pain of mind, and when I awoke the sun was shining brightly on the dancing waters of the Channel .--Gussic was up and gone, and the house was all astir. At first I thought I would be still, and wait for some one to pay me a visit ; but a little. reflection convinced me that nothing was to be gained by putting off the evil day. It would ar better to rise at once, and face with courage all that lay before me ; and now that I knew that Gilbert loved,-and I had such reliance on h love, I knew it would never change,-and no that we understood each other clearly, and b longed to one another, I had every reason to h brave. My sleep, though not of the most refreshin kind, had done me good ; I was young and hea thy, and not easily beaten down, either physica ly or mentally; the bright morning inspirited m and the cold water dashed upon my cheeks an temples seemed to brace not only nerves, b mind. By the time I had completed my toile I was ready to face the world, to meet mes dry gons with a tolerably steady countenance. Breakfast was nearly over, and I half expecte to be scolded for my tardiness ; but, save a sull nod from Tom and an exclamation from Gussi no one took any notice of my entrance. Sib filled my coffee cup as if the act caused her ex-treme disgust, and pushed it towards me without a word or glance. Tom helped me to frizzled ba-con with an air of magnanimity that in other circumstances would have been excessively diverting; and so I ate and drank in solemn silence, conscions all the while that I was being arraigned as a culprit upon whom sentence was ready to be pronounced, and who would not be recommended to mercy. It was not a very hearty meal that I made; it was all one to me that morning whether I luxuriated in Strasbourg pate or broke my fast on school-girls' bread and butter,—all I tasted was flavourless and difficult to swallow. Being summarily "sent to Coventry" in no wise improves your appetite. The wretched breakfast being over, I was wondering what I should do with myself and when I should hear from Gilbert, and I was just resolving to go back to my own room and wait the issue of events there, when the door opened, and the footman entered with a small letter on an immense silver salver, which he handed to me with all due ceremony. All eyes were watching me, I knew, though I did not raise mine, as I broke the seal and contemplated with much misgiving the square, cramped caligraphy of the address. The very sight of the "Miss Torrington" was calculated to inspire one with dread and shrinking; and if the outside were thus alarming, what might the billet itself contain ! It was short enough and to the purpose :--"Mr. Saunderson wishes to converse privately with Miss Torrington. He will be at Mendip House by eleven o'clock : Miss Torrington will then be good enough to grant him an interview." I handed the brief epistle to Mrs. Crofton, who smiled as she read it, and then, looking at Sibyl smiled as she read it, and then, looking at Sibyl as she spoke, she remarked that Mr. Saunderson should be shown into the little parlour, and that I could go to him there. Sibyl, for the first time, looked me in the face, hoping I should enjoy the interview. "Perhaps, dear," she said as she left the room, "the old gentleman is going to pro-pose. A fresh lover and an offer daily is no more the second seco than some people's merits deserve. I would ad-vise you to accept him at once, and throw Mr. Tredgold over without scruple. You know the old proverb, 'A bird in the hand,' &c. Profit by its wisdom, Miss Torrington." Sibyl's taunt did not hurt me. Ah ! I knew well enough why and wherefore Mr. Saunder, son desired to "converse privately" with me; he was going to do his best to separate at once and for ever Gilbert and myself. Would he shine. But I heeded nothing then ; my heart was beating too tumultuously to let me pause and think about the outer world. I could only move about, watching the clock upon the mantle-piece, and wondering stupidly what I should say to Mr. Saunderson, and what he first would say to me. I was gradually getting into a fever and losing all the sense I had, when a light step crossed the lawn, a face looked in at the open window, and Gilbert stood before me.

"Just one word, Margaret," he said-" Be firm. Never mind what Mr. Saunderson says. He will be here directly. Do not be frightened, love, if you can help it : he is always worse if he sees that any one is afraid of him. I wanted to come with him, but he insists on seeing you alone .---Courage, darling ! Be firm, and it will soon be over : the storm will be pretty fierce, I have no doubt ; but it will not last, you know."

"How must I be firm, Gilbert?"

"By holding to your promise to me. You have neither father nor mother; and surely I have the first right now. Say as little as you can help, but steadily decline to give me up." Gilbert did not stay; for the bands of the timepiece were on the stroke of eleven, and we knew that the old gentlemen would be punctual, and we felt instinctively that it would not mend matters if he came and found us alone together. And scarcely had I listened to the last of Gilbert's retreating footsteps, before I heard the heavy tread, and the grampus-like breathing, of my visitor ; he was coming slowly up the gravel walk, and the expression of his countenance was anything but reassuring. I had never seen him look so grim, and fierce, and resolute. He vouchsafed no answer to my timid greeting,-he did not even honour me with a glance ; but he deliberately closed the door, deposited his gold-headed cane in a certain corner,-that cane had its special corner wherever the owner might be; then, seating himself in the one arm chair the room afforded, he coughed and blew his nose vociferously, and addressed himself to the encounter. I, for my part, felt my spirits rise; his rudeness nettled me, and I was determined that he should see that I was not afraid .-So I drew my chair tolerably near to his; for, to add to his attractions, he was a little deaf,-very deaf when it pleased him so to be; and I had no desire to make our conversation actually public. To his great astonishment I opened the campaign by saving, very leisurely,

"You wished to see me, Mr. Saunderson. ] am quite ready to listen to anything you may have to sav."

He cast his large grey eyes on me, half in an ger, half in consternation at my temerity, and, in severe tone, replied, " Doubtless you are prepared, Miss Torrington, for what I have to say ?' I intimated that I was not prepared, as I could not possibly know how he wished to address me. "I do not believe yon," he answered cartly ;

you know well enough why I am here. You know, also, what kind of opinion I am about to express. Now, young lady, beating about the bush never did for me; I say what I mean and mean what I say; and I must request that you will not prevaricate, or put me to the trouble of asking unnecessary questions. In the first place, let me remark that Gilbert Tredgold has played the fool."

I could only say that I was sorry to hear it, or mething quite as silly; the great, staring grey yes, and the purple nose so near my own, were ist reducing me to a state of idiocy.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due. It has been said by a few unfortunate mortals who have striven in vain to gain position of honor and distinction, that they were not sufficiently appreciated. While such may sometimes be the case, it is generally to be observed that true deserving worth is cordially accepted and honored, whether applied to religion, politics, the arts, or invention Next to religion, invention or discovery has the bighesi position, for it wields a mighty influence; through it channels nations have overleaped, as by magic, the bound of separation, and, united by electric wires, can converse together at momentary will. Indeed, the diversified efforts of man's genius in these respects are a source of admiration and gratitude to this whole human race. In medicine, science has revealed dur ing the last quarter of a century, many bidden truths, which had before been considered to be impossibilities:--The malignity of pestilential disease is now in a great measure bereft of its terror, and even the "insatiate ar-cher," consumption, is arrested in his deadly march, and oftentimes overthrown. Undoubtedly the great rally power in the treatment of this and other pulmonary disea-ses, is Dg. Wistrat's Balasas of Wild Charast ; and the foregoing allusions are applicable to the memory of its rilly ustrious discoverer. The proof of the efficacy of this gree remedy is in its undying reputation. It has stood the tes of time, and its fame as a curative of Throat and Lun Complaints has extended to all climes.—Canada Christua. Abocata. Bold at Wholesale, by T. B. BARKER.

AN EFFECTUAL WORM MEDICINE.

Brown's Vermifuge Comfits OR WORM LOZENGES. MUCH SIGENESS undoubtedly, with children, attributed to other causes, is occasioned by worms. The "VERMIFUGE COMFITS," although effectual in destroying worms, can do no possible injury to the most delicate child. This valuable combination has been successfully used by physicians, and found to be safe and sure in eradicating worms, so hurtful to children.

Children having Worms require immediate attention, as neglect of the trouble often causes prolonged sickness.

Symptoms of Worms in Children are often over looked. Worms in the stomach and bowels cause irritation. which can be removed only by the use of a sure remedy .-The combination of ingredients used in making BROWN'S "VERMIFUGE COMFITS" is such as to give the best possible effect with safety.

M. FRANCIS & SONS,

I TAKE great pleasure in recommending to my friends in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the Boys Boarding School of Mr. Cherbuliez. I know him as a highly cultirs-ted gentleman and an accomplished and skilful teacher.— He is a Swiss Protestant, but long resident in this country, and for 17 years be has been connected with Pelham Prio-ry, which is no small recommendation. His school offers superior advantages for acquiring a skilful knowledge of the French language. C. FRED. HARTT. Pelham Priory, Nov. 29, 1866.
