Ushered into the breakfast-room by the same tall footman who had opened the door for me the evening before, I discovered my uncle seated at the table discussing with much apparent gusto the contents of a savoury pie. He scarcely raised his eyes as I entered, and signified his recognition of my presence by a grunt which might equally have been addressed to the morsel of grouse on which he was intent, and to myself. Opposite to him, but with her face turned away, and her knees over the fender, sat a lady, large, and fair, and peevish-looking. She wore a loose morning robe or dressing-gown, and her still abundant hair was fastened up under an elaborate morningcap; her hands were remarkably well shaped and very white-a fact, as I afterwards discovered. which she always bore in mind; and just then they were engaged in holding a beautiful porcelain coffee-cup, and in stirring the contents thereof. Presiding over the urn and the breakfast equipage generally sat an elegant girl with long auburn hair, lovely blue eyes, and an exquisite complexion; but the beauteous face that in itself was so attractive, showed a dissatisfied, querulous expression; there was a frown on the smooth brow, the ruby lips were curved, as if in angry scorn, and there was something resolved and imperious in the gesture with which she handled even the cups and saucers. A more uncomfortable-looking trio I never saw! Nor when the trio became a quartette was its appearance in any way amended; for I felt very ill at ease, and heartily wished that the episode of the early morning had never occurred. My uncle said "Good morning" when he had emptied his mouth, and, laying down his fork, he gave me two fingers, and bade me be seated. My cousin Sibyl-for, of course, it was she whose beauty and whose ill-temper were so apparentlooked at me disdainfully, surveying me from head to foot, and taking no pains to disguise the disapproval in which the scrutiny resulted.

"Oh, by the way!" shouted my uncle, choking over a large piece of pie-crust, "I quite forgot. You don't know your aunt, Margaret. That is Mrs. Crofton, your Aunt Louisa, who is so good as to receive you for the present into the bosom of her family.

How I blessed him for those three words-" for the present!" and how earnestly, I determined to get out of the "bosom" as speedily as possible!

"Of course she knows I am Mrs. Crofton," said the lady with the sleek white hands. Then, turning to me, and giving me the empty cup to carry to the table—" I am afraid you are of a very independent turn of mind, Margaret, and that will not suit me; also, I am afraid your temper is very bad, and that will never do with your consins. I cannot have quarrelling and even fighting in my house. Why did you go to bed last night without seeing either your uncle or "I was so very tired," I pleaded; "and I had been in the house more than three hours, and no one came, and I thought you were engaged." "Of course we were engaged; but we knew you had arrived, and quite expected to see you later in the evening. Why did you not go to Miss Hollingsworth? Your cousins in the schoolroom were surprised at not seeing you there. I do not approve of your being familiar with the servants. You had your tea in the nursery, I am

I was silent; but I could have said, "Why, then, did not Miss Hollingsworth or her pupils seek me, a stranger in the house? Of course, it was not in the fitness of things that I should take tea in the nursery; but I was sick and fainting for want of due refreshment, and nurse was the only person who concerned herself about me. But for her, I might have sunk from fatigue and sheer exhaustion, for no one else thought of offering the weary traveller either meat, drink or

"In future," continued Mrs. Crofton, " you will take your meals with the other girls in the school-room, and you had better understand at once the footing upon which you are here."

I signified my assent; I thought it would be far better at once to know precisely the ground I should occupy in the " bosom of the family." " Have you breakfasted?" asked my uncle.

I replied that I had. I had consumed coffee. thick bread-and-butter, and frizzled bloater two hours before in company with nurse and Rebecca, the baby, Cuddie, and the amiable Gussie. "You had better have a cup of coffee, now," said Mr. Crofton, pushing away the remains of the game pie, and drawing towards him a couple of eggs and the toast-rack. "Give Margaret a

Now, my first impulse was bashfully to say, " No, thank you;" but something told me that it would not do to be too meek in that house ; if I were invited to take coffee why should I not? Its aroma was most fragrant; it was two hours since I had breakfasted; I was feeling cold and embarrassed; doubtless a cup of delicious, warmcoffee would brace me up for what remained to be encountered. It struck me all at once that. if I consented to be a nobody now, a nobody should remain at the end of the chapter; and, if you are aboundingly humble, you may be pretty sure that the world at large will take you at your own valuation. So, having briefly reconsidered my hasty decision, I modified it by saying, "Thank you," and omitted the negation. Sibyl looked at me in sheer amaze, and I could see that my aunt immediately pronounced me guilty of reprehensible presumption. But I tried to look unconcerned, and sat still on my chair, gazing into the fire, till Sibyl had poured out my coffee, which she pushed towards me without a word or glance. I rose and took it gracefully, and thanked her with all the self-possession could muster; then I trifled with my spoon, stirred up my coffee, tasted it, and finally begged for another lump of sugar. Sibyl looked very hard at me as she dropped the sugar into my cup; she did not speak, but I knew she longed to say, "Was there ever such a piece of impudence be-fore! Oh, you cool, insufferable girl!" And I knew, also, that she would say it, and much more of the same kind, when she and I were better acquainted. As for my aunt, she sat aghast, staring at me with a troubled countenance; as the said afterwards to her husband, "There would be no bringing that girl under; she had effrontebe no bringing that girl under; she had effrontery enough to face the whole town of Cotswoldbury." And yet I had only taken a cup of coffee that was offered to me by the master of the house; and I had courteously requested another lump of sugar! Whereas I ought not to have had the daring to say, "Yes," on being pressed; I ought to have taken the cup awkwardly and shyly, and have been content with it, nor ventured to find fault, even if it were not sweetened in

But my suut soon recovered herself, and Sibyl, leaning her pretty chin upon her rosy little palm, stared nonchalantly in my face. I sipped my coffee, as I hoped, quite naturally, and as I did so felt that it was stimulating my nerves most charmingly; the storm was coming, rising heavily and fast, but it would not beat on my head altogether with impunity. I was prepared to hold my own; only I hoped I should not less my temper; for I knew right well, that he or she, who in a con bat of any kind preserves composure and speaks rationally, is almost sure to be the

A COMMON SENSE VIEW OF THE MODE IN WHICH Hostetter's

STOMACH BITTERS

ACT UPON THE HUMAN SYSTEM.

THIS is an age of inquiry. People want to know the why and wherefore of all statements submitted to them as facts, and as far as this GREAT PROTECTIVE AND INVIGORANT

s concerned, it is proposed to gratify them.

All the physicians admit that the greatest difficulty they encounter in their practice is in conveying to the seat of the disease the medicament that will counteract and neutralize it. Electricity has been tried for this purpose, but it is now generally admitted that the electric fluid is too subtle an agent to be made the vehicle of medication. It shocks the nerves, but cannot distribute through the system anything except itself. Medicated electricity is, in short, an exploded humbug. But a liquid stimulant, as everybody knows, can be charged with the essential properties of any and every substance in the Materia Medica, and there is to herbial extract which it will not hold in sowith all its preventive and curative virtues unim

Now the pure liquid stimulant of which

Hostetter's Bitters are in part composed, is charged with invaluable vegetable remedies; and these, by reason of its powerful diffusive principle, it conveys to every organ and introduces into the circulation. To use a common expression, it goes to the spot, taking with it just what is wanted there. The Essence of Rye would undoubtedly diffuse itself through the organization as swiftly if administered pure and simple, as if mixed with the juices of tonic and alterative roots, barks and herbs. But of what use would it be without their healing, strengthening, life sustaining balm? It would merely excite, It could neither protect nor care. And herein lies the essential difference between the effect of the purest stimulant when given alone, and the same

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS. Good monongahela spirit is doubtless the mildest and most innocuous of all the varieties of liquor, but it only becomes a healthful medicine when impregnated with the vegetable elements employed in the preparation of the Bitters.

TO DYSPEPTIC SUFFERERS. Under the general head of Dyspepsia may be classed all the varieties of Indigestion. Its symptoms are so various, and differ so much in different individuals, that it is almost and differ so much in different individuals, that it is aimost impossible to classify them. In fact, some of them are indescribable. It may be safely asserted, however, that half of the diseases of mankind spring from a disordered state of the stomach; and that the other half, whatever their origin, react upon that sensitive and important organ. Among the ordinary indications of Dyspepsia are flatulence, a bloated and full feeling about the stomach and abdomen immediately after eating, a gnawing sensation, or a sense of hollowness at the pit of the stomach between meals, a dull heavy feeling in the head, feeble or unsteady appetite, occasional nausea, restlessness during the night, and a weary, unrefreshed feeling on rising in the morning, palpitation of the heart, depression of mind, sometimes amounting to monomania, loss of memory, confusion of thought, sour stomach, with raising of food, and a choking sensation in the throat, dimness of the eye, pain in the diaphragm, feebleness and disinclination for exertion, and sometimes emaciation and a corpse-like pallor. These are a few of the direct signs of Dyspepsia, but as it is generally complicated with specific affections of the bowels, the liver and the nerves, its victims have many additional torments, which are technically attributed to other causes. origin, react upon that sensitive and important organ which are technically attributed to other causes.

The best advice that can be given to any one who has the slightest predisposition to Dyspepsia, is to fortify his or her digestive organs by the daily use of HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

HOSTETTER'S BITTERS.

The disease proceeds from a lack of vigor in the stomach, and this vitalizing preparation will tone and renovate that organ. If the gastric apparatus is in good working order, and can perfectly dissolve and thoroughly assimilate the food submitted to its operation, there will be no dyspepsia. It it cannot do this, it requires reinforcement, and the best of all reinforcing agents should be forthwith resorted to. The stomach is the commissary of the system. It supplies the elements of life to the whole body. In it is prepared the material of blood, muscle, bone and fibre, and if it fails to purvey that material in sufficient quantity and of a proper kind, the whole body suffers, and with it the mental faculties. Therefore protect the "Commissary Department." Don't let the enemy obtain possession of it. It is easier to prevent disease from getting into an organ, than to expel it after it becomes a chronic fixture. Consider the first indication of uneasiness in the stomach as a sign that dyspepsia is preparing to attack, and baffle it at once with this great repellant.

But if it is too late to prevent, remember that it is not

But if it is too late to prevent, remember that it is not too late to cure. It is beheved that there is no case of chronic indigestion that can withstand the remedial operation of HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS.

This belief is grounded on twelve years' experience of the efficacy of the preparation. The first instance of its failure to give relief is yet unchronicled. If it ever had failed, the voluminous correspondence addressed to the proprietors from all parts of the United States and South America, would at least include one letter expressing dissatisfaction. But no, there is not one! The testimony, extending over But no, there is not one! The testimony, extending over a period of more than a dozen years, is all of the same approving tenor. Certainly this is a sufficient warrant for claiming that the BITTERS are a SPECIFIC FOR INDIGESTION, IN ALL ITS VARIETIES.
