The Samily and the Sarm.

[From the Methodist.] A Story For Grown-up People. BY AMANDA M. DOUGLAS.

WHICH WAS BEST? OR, MR. FALCONER'S DONATION. " A Life Insurance!" exclaimed Miss Carter, and her usually soft voice went up to a high key. Miss Carter prided herself upon her birth and breeding, and it was rarely indeed that anything disturbed her equanimity. A Life Insurance! It seems to me just like flying in the face of Providence. When a person's death-hour has come, God means that he shall lay down his life in a Christian fashion, trusting him, and that friends shall not make so solemn an event as death a subject of speculation. It looks absolutely wicked to me,"

"But my dear Miss Carter, allow me to explain the matter. It is a fair, honest business transaction, and not considered any subject of speculation. By paying a certain amount yearly, if one chooses, a man insures to his family a certain amount at his death. This would be more, probably, than families living on a small income could save. When one has a little laid by, it is so apt to be drawn upon in case of an emergency. This cannot be done with a life insurance, and the system is really safer than putting money in a savings-bank."

"But ministers seem to me a peculir people, set aside to God's service. We don't expect them to be making fortunes or laying up money. They are in the watchful care of the Lond. We do not read that St. Paul advised his brethren to have their lives insured, or proposed that the congregations should do it for them. Those who wait upon the altar are to be partakers with the altar, and the widows and orphans are especially commended to the care of the churches."

Miss Carter drew a long breath, and smoothed a rumple out of her neat morning dress. She fancied that she had established her point in triumph, and smiled graciously upon her discomfited friend, as she could well afford to do.

"Very true," and Mrs. Howth tried to keep her tone pleasant and persuasive. "But the apostle also admonishes a man to provide for his own household. It is quite impossible for ministers to save much, especially in our denomination, where they have fluctuating incomes. We think we give our pastor a very fair salary, yet I know that I, with my husband and children, and less company than the Falconers, spend considerably more in the course of the year. Mrs. Falconer keeps one servant in the kitchen, and a half-grown girl in the nursery, which is not at all extravagant ; but if Mr. Falconer were to die to-morrow, I doubt if there would be fifty dollars left for his family."

"The Lord would raise them up friends on every side. You wrong us if you think we would allow Mrs. Falconer to suffer."

"Not at first, I suppose; but there would soon be a new interest for us, and, without meaning it, we would grow neglectful. She would be too proud and sensitive to make her wants known. She is a refined, accomplished, sensitive woman, and, with her attractions, might have done much better, pecuniarily, than marry a poor Methodist minister. I honor the woman who has the bravery to do it."

sure, and I think her trust in a wiser and higher power is perfect, I believe your plan will hardly meet with her sanction."

"Miss Carter, suppose that Mr. Howth and several other gentlemen proposed to settle five thousand dollars upon Mr. Falconer at the expiration of a certain number of years, or, in case of his death before that time, to give it to his wife: would the idea shock you?"

"That is quite different."

Mrs. Howth smiled. "An endowment policy amounts to precisely the same thing. We could have an insurance upon his life, merely paying a certain amount every year, but this would be a very small gift. The other would cost considerably more, yet I believe we can raise it. I think it would be a great comfort to any woman to feel that she and her children were not to be left entirely destitute.

"There would be some way provided. If Mr. Falconer were my own brother, I should not consent that his widow should make money out of his death. It appears to me that life insurance really offers a premium to crime. Now and then we hear of such a "Very rarely; and they are always detected. I am sorry you feel so about it, Miss Carter," and Mrs. Howth gave a kind of disappointed smile.

"Anything else that you can propose I shall be most glad to share. This is a matter of principle

Mrs. Howth rose and wished Miss Carter good morning. It was a rather inauspicious beginning. She had spent an hour trying to explain the matter, with this poor result at the last place she had visited. Would there be such a prejudice in everybody's

She walked slowly until she came to Mrs. Grayson's. "It's hardly worth while to try," she thought. "Mrs. Grayson has some very rigid opinions. I should much sooner count upon Miss Carter, and she Still, she rang the door-bell. With much less hope in her heart, she was ushered into a cosey sitting room, where a cheerful grate fire sent out a ruddy glow. In the bay window there was a stand of blossoming plants, and a canary-bird from his perch above was warbling a merry song to the sunshine

The two ladies conversed a while on general topics, then, with a little rising color, Mrs. Howth began: "I have come on a peculiar errand this morning, and I sincerely hope it will meet your approval. You know we are in the habit of giving our minister a donation party every year, and we thought we would have it on his birth-day this time, which will be in

"You will find me ready to respond," the lady an swered with a gracious smile. "Have you ever thought about a life insurance?"

Mrs. Howth asked, with some trepidation. "I confess that I have not. The idea is rather distasteful to me, that the death of your nearest and dearest friends should be made a subject of gain. Mr. Grayson proposed it once, but I could not endure the A few weeks ago Mr. Howth and I came to the anniversary of our marriage. We always exchange gifts in remembrance of the day, and he brought me large envelope, which I thought must contain a Government bond. On opening it, I found a policy for ten thousand dollars, on what is called the endowment plan. It surprised me very much, and at first I could not cordially approve of it. Then he plained its benefits. It was possible that, in some night be swept away; or, during a lingering illness, might be swept 1 way; or, during a lingering liness, he might be subjected to many losses. He wanted to be sure that I and the children would not be left entirely destitute. Some friends of his are very much interested in a new company, and persuaded him to insure. By paying in a certain amount at stated interested in a new company, and persuaded him to insure. By paying in a certain amount at stated interested in a new company, and persuaded him to insure. By paying in a certain amount at stated interest, or at once, if you choose, you take out a policy for ten years. At the expiration of ten years, the amount is paid to you if you are living, or, if you disbefore that time, it goes to your family."

"Isn't that quite a new idea? Thave known of some instances where men paid for a number of years, and, through some inadvertence, at the last lost all.' "That would be impossible in any case here, as the policies are non-forteitable. If they are neglected after a number of years, the person receives according to the amount he has paid. But Mr. Howth likes the endowment plan best."

Don't you think the money would be better They could invest it in any manner that suited

Mrs. Howth smiled, "There are always so many wants in a minister's household. This would absolutely provide against the future, and the interest of a small sum in a bank would amount to very little. With Mr. Falconer's life ends the income of his family, and it is not pleasant to look destitution in the face. Mrs. Falconer is accomplished and ingenious, but she could hardly take care of her three children and earn the bare necessities of life." You know we are trying to make some provision for the widows and orphans of our ministers." "Yes, and that is very good. The Saviour said: The poor ye have always you. But I think it is better to place them above such contingencies, since it can be done. Many sensitive women would shrink from applying to a relief society,"

"That is most true: but why should you have such an apprehension of Mr. Falconer's death! He is young and strong, and bids fair to live to a good

"Yet how often we see these hearty, youthful men carried off by some sudden disease! God grant that Mrs. Falconer may never know the anguish of such a loss. It seems to me that a man's deepest regret in dying would be to know that his beloved ones would be left destitute. He can commend them to God's care, but they will still need daily bread. "We Methodists, you know, are a peculiarly trustful people," Mrs. Grayson said, with a smile. "I' confess I like to see this perfect dependence upon

God, who careth for the sparrows." "But suppose you were a widow to-day, without A faint color passed over Mrs. Grayson's face.

This very morning she had been making out a list of fall and winter clothing for herself and children, and was quite amazed at the aggregate. She was not an extravagant woman, either.

"This plan," continued Mrs. Howth, "provides for other incidents as well. A minister not unfrequently loses his voice, occasionally his eyesight, or is otherwise disabled. If he had five or ten thousand dollars coming to him, what a relief it would be, instead of having to look forward to charity."

"I've never given the subject much thought, Mrs. Howth," she said, seriously, "but it does seem of some importance, I will confess. I've had a strong prejudice against life insurance, but, after all, our ime is in God's hands. It cannot make or mar. When I opposed Mr. Grayson's scheme, he settled some property upon me; yet, if by any mischance, he should die insolvent, I should give it up at once; so I hardly feel as if I had it, for reverses of fortune do occur frequently. Mrs. Falconer could never have

"No, it will not be possible for Mr. Falconer to make money or save it. Mr. Howth and I look upon our contribution as a positive pleasure. Every one who takes out a policy helps increase the income for some one else, if he should make no demand on the society until he has paid all."

"You make it a very comprehensive source of charity." "I am greatly interested in it, especially as regards ministers. And it will be but a small sum for each person to give" "I should like to come over this evening with Mr. Grayson, if you are not engaged. I fancy you will have an enthusiastic convert in him." "We shall be most glad to see you," Mrs. Howth eplied. The morning was gone, but Mrs. Howth did not consider it wasted; yet she felt she would have to combat a great deal of prejudice before she gained

The Gravsons came in the evening, and they had a pleasant chat upon the subject. We'll make it ten thousand," Mr. Grayson said. "Ive been prospered unusually this year, and I'm glad to show my regard for Mr. Falconer in this manner. If there's any deficit at the last, I'll help you out. But," and he gave a shrewd smile, "my advice is that you go to gentlemen principally. Women think an insurance policy is something like a death warrant. I'm glad you have converted my

"I'll promise to make some calls," Mrs. Grayson announced.
