The Samily and the Jarm.

Looking Through Glass.

"Lucy," said Frank, one day, to his sister, "I think consin James is nothing but a spooney, after all," "And what is a spooney?" asked Lucy,

"O, you know. He knows Latin, and all such things, but he don't know anything that's worth knowing. When we were on the pond, yesterday, I told him to take hold of the rudder, and what do you suppose he did? He took the oar. Now, if that is not being a spooney, what is ?" "Then that is your definition of a spooney,

"Yes. You know any one may be smart enough, and yet know nothing about practical matters, "But James is two years younger than you, and has never been in the country before. " Well, I guess I should have known better than that, if I'd never heard of the country," replied Frank, rather contemptuously.

Lucy said nothing more at the moment, but waited till the children were all assembled in the sitting-room, after tea. Then she said to James, " Did I not here you say you had been to visit some glass works, a week or two before you came

"Yes: I went with Uncle John."

"I wish you would tell me something about them," continued Lucy. "I have never seen anything of the kind." "Well," said James, " in the first place, of course, you go into the great rooms where the sand is heaped up. "What's the sand for ?" asked Frank.

"To make the glass, of course," said James, rather scornfully.

Frank looked a little abashed. "If they make glass out of sand," said he, " I think this would be a splendid place to make it, for here is the whole seashore, with such nice, white sand." " Pooh !" said James ; " they wouldn't look at such sand as this to make glass. It would be too coarse for barn windows. "Perhaps they refine it," suggested Frank .-"I don't know where they could get any better."

"O, there are plenty of places. This that we saw came from Berkshire county, where there are whole hills of fine, white sand, which looks almost like snow. Then they have to mix other things with it to make glass." "Yes," said Frank, "water, I suppose, to boil

James tried hard not to laugh, but could not help it.

" I don't remember everything; but one of the principal thing is potash, and for nice glass, red lead. And, O Lucy, you ought to see the lead ! They have great bars of it, and it looks as dull as you please. But they put it into great ovens. that are heated so hot you can't stand within a rod of them, and melt it. And you never saw such a beautiful color. A man stands with a long iron rod, and works it over and over. O, I wish you could see it! Uncle John said that even vermilion did not begin to express the depth and splender of it; and it varies from silver to searlet. It is perfectly beautiful! O, then-I forgot

-I suppose I ought to have told you, in the first place, how they make the pots for melting the glass. They have a peculiar kind of clay which comes from Germany, I believe, and this they put into great bins. And how do you suppose they get all the air out of it ?"

"I suppose they have some enormous great press," suggested Frank.

"No," said James; "they tried to use a machine, but found it wouldn't answer. The men tread out the clay barefooted. They tread, tread, tread, all day long, and there is nothing like it for making the clay compact and pressing out all " How dreadful!" said little Mary : " I should not want to do that,"

"Nor I," said James; "but the men said they liked it well enough. Then they take the clay and knead it, just like bread, and make it into long rolls, and make the pots of these, pressing them on, one by one, with their hands. So the pots are very strong; and they let them stand and dry six months before they use them, or else they would crack as soon as put into the furna-ces. They are the funniest looking things! It was as good as going to a menagerie. There was a great room full of these pots that were drying, and they looked for all the world like clephants that had lost their trunks."

"I should think" said Lucy, "that even after they are dry they would be likely to crack when put into such heated furnaces."

"Of course," replied James; "I was just coming to that. They put one of these pots into a furnace without a fire, at first, and heat it gradnally till the new pot is exactly as hot as the old one. They then tear away the brick from the furnace where the glass is melted, and roll in an iron truck and drag out the broken pot. That's a beautiful sight, too. Then in a minute you see some men come rushing along with another truck with this great red-hot elephant on it—and this goes into the furnace, and then they brick it up again." "And now," said Frank, " what about the glass?" O, I'm just coming to it," said James. "After they have mixed the sand and potash and lead, etc., all together, they put the mass into these furnaces. The fire is never allowed to die out, and you may believe they are hot. I think it takes six weeks to heat them hot enough to use. All around the furnace are openings that they call 'glory holes,' where you can look in .-Then men come with long iron rods, and put them into the melted glass, and so take out some of it on the ends of the rods. These rods are hollow, and they blow into them, and the glass then puffs out into just the shape they want. I tried to blow, myself, but I blew too hard; and although I only had a little piece on the rod, it puffed out as big as a pumpkin, and it was the funniest shape! They have to learn to blow "Then you wasted the glass. Did they like that ?" asked Frank. " O, that was no matter," said James; "when they break glass, the only loss is the loss of work—for the pieces are put right in with the cullet, and melted over again."

"What is cullet?" asked Lucy.

"Broken glass," said James. "They always have barrels and barrels of it. They send boys around the city to gather up all the pieces they "Can they blow a whole pitcher, for instance, with the handle on it, all at once !" inquired

"Of course not," replied James, "there is hardly anything that can be blown entire, unless it is lamp chimneys. They blow a little, and then roll the glass over and over on a smooth iron ta-roll the glass over and over on a smooth fron table, then they blow a little more, and so on.—

Then they take big shears and cut off the parts they don't want. With these shears they do ever so many things. For instance, in making a goblet, they make a little hole with the point, and keep turning them around and around till they get it big enough for the mouth of the goblet. Then they do just the same with the foot of the goblet, only they don't make it so large, and take the side of the shears and smooth this down, till, there is a standard.

"I don't see how they could blow the diamonds on our goblets," said Mary.

"O, those are not blown," said James. "They are not so nice as blown ones. It doesn't take a minute to make them. There are great iron moulds, just the shape you want. Somebody drops some melted glass into the mould. Then Street, Boston, and for sale by Druggists generally.

somebody else comes down, clap, with a great press, and then raises it again, and a boy puts in a kind of narrow pitchfork and pulls out the goblet, all made."

"But how do they put the handles to pitchers?" asked Frank. "Do they press those on?"
"One. When the pitcher is done, a boy comes along with a lot of melted glass on his rod, and claps it against the pitcher for the top of the handle, and then he gives it a little swing and claps it against the place where he wants the lower part of the handle to be, and the thing is done; and it hardens so quick that it stays put, splendidly."

" So now we have our pitcher and goblet all ready to use," said Frank.

"Not quite," said James. "They have to be annealed, first, or they would be good for nothing, as they would break so easily. So they are put on a railroad, in an oven there Mary's eyes opened very wide), and are moved along gradually till they pass over a cooler part of the oven, and cooler and cooler, till at last they have no heat under them. If they are well annealed, they will not break easily."

" I should like to see such a factory," said Frank. "Didn't you bring anything away as a memento ?" "Yes," said James, "we bought several things.

Uncle John bought a silver door-knob." " A silver door-knob!" repeated Frank, in surprise. "I should'nt think that was a memento of a glass factory." Well, of course it wasn't real silver; but I'll tell you how they make such things. They make a glass door-knob, in the first place, then they put on the thinnest possible coating of quickeil ver, and then another coating of glass; and then it looks just as the whole was silver-and it is better on some accounts, because it never needs oolishing. They make goblets in the same way; out you can tell those in a minute, because they are so much thicker than real silver, and yet as light as glass."

"Did you see them color glass?" asked Lucy. "Yes, in two or three different ways. Sometimes just a few grains of some matter, thrown into the great bin where the sand, potash, etc., are all mixed, will change the whole appearance of the glass. Then the way they make these handsome lamp-globes is this: they first make the globe of flint-glass; then they put on a coating of red or blue, or whatever they want, and then another coating of this opaque glass. Then they send it to the cutting-room and have figures cut in it, and of course, where it is cut, we see the edges of the flint and colored glass."

"They cut with diamonds, don't they?" asked Frank, wishing to appear intelligent.

"Ho! ho!" laughed James, in spite of himself. "There are not enough diamonds in the world to do all the cutting which they do in a day. They have wheels that turn around very fast, and are always kept wet, and they hold the glass against the wheels, and cut it in that way. The wheels are of all sizes, some so small that they engrave with them. That is very beautiful. They engrave animals and flowers and fruit and birds, and all sorts of pretty things. And it takes such little wheels to do it. I saw a man engrave a tinv bird, and he drew the eye with a wheel no bigger than a pin-head."

"And do they not paint on glass, too ?" asked

" O yes, we saw a great deal of very beautiful painting, for lamp-shades and things of that "I should think it would wear off in a little while," said Frank.

So it would if it wasn't burnt in; but after they paint the glass, they put it into a furnace, ank keep it there till the colors are firm.' "I should think that would melt the glass,"

"O, they don't put it right into the fire, but only where it is very hot."

"How very nice it must be to see such things," said Frank, sighing, half enviously. "Well," said James, "when you come to see me, I will show you all kinds of such things." "When Frank said "good-night" to Lucy, he whispered in her ear. " I don't think now that James is such a spoo-ney, after all. I am afraid I should have known less than he does about the country, if I had never lived in it; and he knows heaps of things I don't know .- Little Corporal.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY. For the cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Influenza, Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Predisposition to

This great remedy is too well known, and is performing too much good, to make it necessary to go into an elaborate discussion of its merits. Suffice it to say, that it still maintains its supremacy in curing diseases of the most obstinate character, and that all who suffer from the above omplaints, after having tested this remedy, seldom have occasion to resort to other appliances to insure a perfect restoration to health. LETTER FROM ELDER H. L. GILMAN, A Minister of the Gospel in Vermont. GLOVER, Vt., June 20, 1859.

Gents.—I hereby certify that I have been troubled for several years with a difficulty of the heart and lungs, have applied to several physicians for help, and have tried almost every remedy of the numerous ones which have been recommended, without receiving any assistance; but had been growing weaker and weaker, until, hearing of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry about a year since, I commenced using it, with immediate relief. It has not only restored my lungs to a sound state, but I am entirely relieved of the difficulty or disease of the heart. I have no hesitation in saving that it is the ager lung medicine before the public, and I cheerfully and conscientiously recommend it
