THE CHRISTIAN VISITOR.

The Samily and the Sarm.

The Winged Worshippers.

BY CHARLES SPRAGUE. Addressed to Two Swallows that flew into a Church during Divine Service.

Gay, guiltless pair, What seek ye from the fields of heaven? Ye have no need of prayer, Ye have no sins to be forgiven.

Why perch ye here, Where mortals to their Maker bend ? Can your pure spirits fear The God ye never could offend ?

Ye never knew The crimes for which we come to weep. Penance is not for you, Blessed wanderers of the upper deep.

To you 'tis given To wake sweet Nature's untaught lays : Beneath the arch of heaven To chirp away a life of praise.

Then spread each wing, Far, far above, o'er lake and lands, And join the choirs that sing In you blue dome not reared with hands.

Or, if ye stay, To note the consecrated hour, Teach me the airy way. And let me try your envied power.

Above the crowd, On upward wings could I but fly, I'd bathe in yon bright cloud, And seek the stars that gem the sky.

'Twere Heaven indeed Through fields of trackless light to soar, On Nature's charms to feed, And Nature's own great God adore. -Transcript.

"The Blessed Money."

BY PAUL CORDEN.

" Now what shall I do with this money? Only twenty-five cents ! It won't buy much of anything. Dear me ! Father's always so careful when he gives me money. I should think he might hand over a roll of bills sometimes, and let me spend money like a man, and feel like a man too. Twenty-five cents ! Pshaw! nonsense! It's only a plague. I have a good mind to throw it away.

That was what Arthur Weston said to himself, as he strolled along the street, with a portemonnaie in his hand, containing the despised twenty-five cents.

"Ab, now I know what I'll do with this homeopathic dose of money !" he suddenly exclaimed. "I'll go into the confectioner's and buy some fresh figs. It's the very thing I want. If I can't make a little money go a great ways (and I'd like to know who can), I'll make it go as far as it will. There's nothing like figs. I'd buy pounds of them every year, if I only had erough money."

The twenty-five cents had suddenly risen in value, for they now suggested delicious figs, and Arthur made a rush round the corner, to the confectioner's.

But a picture was suddenly spread out before him, and it was far from being a pleasant picture. He had just turned the corner when he spied a to herself in a low tone, she said : " Oh, th blessed money ! Twenty-five cents-that's a grea deal. I wonder if my poor old stiff hands will ever again earn that much.

"Who has supported you since you've been unable to take care of yourself ?" asked Arthur, " The poormaster has done something for me, but he's getting fired of me. He thinks I migh work more, if I would ; but folks that are well off don't know how tired and sick and stiff th poor often are. I've nothing against him, though. Poor folks are tiresoure, I know."

"I'm just as sorry for you as I can be !" exclaimed Arthur, " and I mean to ask my fathe to do something for you,"

" You're the best-mannered little man I have ever seen, and I'll ask the good Lord to do some thing for yon," replied the old woman. "I won' forget, very soon, the twenty-five cents that bough this good sweet bread."

As Arthur left the rheun stic old woman, h heard her say to herself : " Oh, the blessed mo ney, and the beautiful little young gentleman that bonght me the bread !" And he never again scorned twenty-five cents, or was at a loss to know what to do with it. Neither did it seem a very small sum ; for he never, after that, had twenty five cents, without thinking of the " blessed mot ney" that bought the bread.

sallow, wrinkled, weather-beaten woman, sitting on the grass by the roadside, and close by her sat a cross-looking, crying little boy, who appeared to be about three years old. And what were they doing there ? Resting-resting as well as they could in their rags and poverty. And what else were they doing? Satisfying their hunger as well as they could with mouldy bread.

"Why! Does any one in this world ever eat mouldy bread ?" exclaimed Arthur to himself, as he passed the woman, and went so near that he could see the green mould on the bread. Then he turned back, and said to the poor creature :--" It can't be that you like such bread, and I'd like to know why you eat it, when there's plenty of good sweet bread to be had." "' Plenty of good sweet bread to be had,'" answered the poor woman, in a half indignant voice and manner, "Not for everybody, my young lad, not for everybody. I hadn't a mouthful of anything in my shanty to eat this morning -not one mouthful for me or the little boy, and when I went to that fine house over yonder, to ask for a few cold bits, the kitchen woman told me she was tired of beggars, but I might pick up what she had thrown out in the back yard, if I wanted to; and it was there I found these monIdy crusts. But you may be sure they don't eat mouldy crusts, or anything else that's mouldy, in that fine house. No, no, 'there's plenty of good sweet bread to be had' there, no doubt.— Can you tell me who lives there ?"

Arthur blushed, even in the presence of the poor old beggar, as he replied : "That's my father's house.

"Your father's house ? A splendid place .--Nothing worse than good sweet bread to be had there, that's certain ; but the poor may take the mouldy pieces the rich throw outside. Yes, yes, that's the way."

There was something sorrowful and defiant in the expression of the poor woman's face and in her manner, and Arthur would have been angry, if his heart had not been touched by the sight of a human being eating dry, mouldy crusts. As it was, he was for a moment almost offended, but a thought of the daily miseries of the poor, of which he had often heard his father and mother speak, and the misery that was then spread out before him, prompted him to speak very kindly to the woman.

" My father is rich, I know," he said, " but he isn't hard-hearted-neither is my mother. It was the cook who told you that you might pick up what she had thrown out into the yard. She is always cross to the poor, and my mother has often talked to her about it."

" And don't your mother know what the cook does ?" answered the old woman, slow to be pa-

" No, not always ; for Martha won't take the trouble to go and tell mother, when any poor person comes for something to eat. I wish my mother could have seen you-and if you'll go there again, I'll go with you."

"No, no," answered the woman, in a despair-ing tone. "I'm too tired, and too lame. I'm stiff with rheumatism, and I and the boy will sit here, and make the best of our mouldy bread for to-day." "I don't want you to eat that mouldy bread, and if you won't go home with me, I'll run round the corner to the baker's, and buy you a loaf of bread-a beautiful fresh loaf !"

"Bless the lad, bless the lad," said the poor creature, as Arthur started off. He was not gone long, and when he came back, he brought two fresh loaves of bread, and the thin, half-starved little boy by his mother's side, jumped to his feet and held ont eager hands, while he cried out :--

"Give me some, give me some!" The mother burst into tears, and covered her face with her apron. Her irritated, bitter, suspi-cious manuer was all gone, and she said : "Did
