The Family and the Farm.

Bringing our Sheaves with us.

The time for toil is past, and night is come—
The last and saddest of the harvest eves;
Worn out with labor long and wearisome,
Drooping and faint the reapers hasten home,
Each laden with his sheaves.

Last of the laborers, thy feet I gain,
Lord of the harvest! and my spirit grieves
That I am burdened not so much with grain,
As with a heaviness of heart and brain;—
Master, behold my sheaves!

Few, light, and worthless,—yet their trifling weight
Through all my frame a weary aching leaves;
For long I struggled with my hapless fate,
And stayed and toiled till it was dark and late,
Yet these are all my sheaves.

Full well I know I have more tares than wheat,
Brambles and flowers, dry stalks, and withered leaves;
Wherefore I blush and weep, as at thy feet
I kneel down reverently, and repeat,
Master, behold my sheaves!

I know these blossoms, clustering heavily
With evening dew upon their folded leaves,
Can claim no value nor utility;—
Therefore shall fragrancy and beauty be
The glory of my sheaves.

So do I gather strength and hope anew,
For well I know thy patient love perceives
Not what I did, but what I strove to do;
And, though the full, ripe ears be sadly few,
Thou wilt accept my sheaves.

OUR MINISTER'S PURCHASE.

"Are these all you have for sale?" said Mr. Hale, as he stood in the yard before Depray's stable, while the salesman walked around a low, heavy built grey horse, and a tawny, large-boned racker.

"Yes, sir. These are all we have to-day, except a young mare, that I don't think you'd like. Jim, bring out that black filly," and the clumsy hostler proceeded to pull out with jerks and twitches, a small, rough-coated animal, whose bleeding mouth and scarred flanks showed that she had been unmercifully treated.

She resented the hostler's rough handling with spirit; still she did not look vicious. There was no very ugly gleam of the eyes, but, on the contrary, a pleading expostulation with the coarse creature, who gave her a blow and a kick to make her show off, and brought her up with a jerk of the halter that almost broke her slender neck.

"We've sold her twice, but had her returned," said the salesman. "She's gentle as a lamb, unless she gets her temper up, then she's a regular devil, and for all she's so small, she's as strong and fierce as a lion when she's roused."

"I guess Bill Smith 'll take her, and he'll break her temper or her neck."

Going up to her, Mr. Hale spoke kindly, patting her neck, which was still quivering with pain from the pressure of the halter; passed his hand caressingly over her nose, and flung back the heavy mane that was tangled and knotted above her eyes.

The poor creature seemed to know at once that he was of a different nature from her old tormentors, and, with a gentle whiny, laid her head confidingly upon his shoulder, while her large hazel eyes filled with something very much like tears.

She was not such a horse as he wanted. Her spirit seemed broken, except when enraged, and she had been abused and neglected till she was anything but a beauty; still her head was well formed, and her eyes almost human in their expression. If her coat could be made smooth, she might possibly pass without exciting remark. Mr. Hale liked to drive a good looking animal as well as any one, and he hesitated for some time, but he could not resist her pleading look to be taken from her brutal owners.

"I think I will take her," he said at length. "I will send for her this afternoon," and paying the price asked, which was not large, he left the yard, followed by the imploring gaze of the poor beast, whose instinct readily recognized his kindness and humanity, but not to comprehend that he was to be her future master.

It was not quite dark when Mr. Hale dispatched his Irish boy for his new purchase; and for several weeks she was allowed to remain quietly in the stable.

During this time Dennis worked arduously under Mr. Hale's direction, in cleaning the knots from her luxuriant mane, and brushing its full waves to a shining gloss. Her rough coat yielded readily to high keeping and care, giving, in its jetty blackness and silky softness, sure proof of good blood. It was evident that she had always been ruled through fear, but she was particularly susceptible to kindness, and Mr. Hale thought what time could be spared from duty and study, well spent in teaching her to love and obey him. He called her Psyche, and the name seemed very appropriate, for her slender form and jetty blackness, united with a capricious gracefulness, made her much more beautiful than her master had anticipated.

Dennis had been very indignant when she first came home. He had boasted to the neighboring boys of the "splendid creature" his master was about to purchase, and his first sight of the "little black devil," as he called her, had sorely vexed him. But he soon became interested in her, and as she grew in beauty under his hands, his pleasure and his pride knew no bounds.

He would follow her with his eyes, as Mr. Hale drove away, and fairly caper with delight, as after a playful caracoling she would spring off, throwing her miles behind in fine style.

He taught her many tricks. She would carry and fetch his coat, when ordered. One day the provender had not been given her as usual; to his great delight he found her tugging at the string of the oat bag. He was never weary of recounting her exploits to her master, who for his part found the exercise and excitement of driving her ladyship very agreeable and beneficial, after the confinement of the study, and for some time the pleasure both experienced was unalloyed.

But trouble was brewing for Psyche, who, to repay the kindness of her master, put on a thousand graceful airs, and assumed a dainty tread not at all ministerial.

Martingale and check availed not; she persisted in arching her neck, tossing her mane, and prancing in a very undignified manner. She seemed to take a special delight, when passing Deacon Saunders' house, in pretending to see all sorts of bugbears about the yard, and her dilating nostrils, flashing eye and timid bound were very pretty to see, or would have been in any but a minister's horse. The poor deacon was sadly tried about it. He had been one of Mr. Hale's warmest friends, but how could he countenance such doings as these? It was a new phase in his ministerial experience. Old Mr. Dow, under whose preaching he was converted, drove a horse that never forgot the dignity of her station so far as to exceed a fast walk on any occasion, and he could not help feeling scandalized at such an innovation on the old custom.

So much was his mind exercised upon the subject, he felt it his duty to expostulate with his pastor. Mr. Hale heard him with a smile, and endeavored to soften his animosity to poor Psyche, by telling him of her docility and gentleness, but to no purpose. He left him not in anger, but with a lengthened visage and a sorrowful shake of the head.

The good deacon lived just below the parsonage, in an old farm-house, whose projecting roof where the swallows colonized, wide stone-floored porch, and a large yard shaded by Lombardy poplars, give a venerable appearance.

The yard, with its carpet of emerald turf, was the playground of the deacon's grandson, a little black-eyed fellow, whose father, who had gone to the land of gold, had placed his wife and a year old boy in his father's house for protection. The child was the idol of his grand-parents, and the pet of the whole village. Mr. Hale often walked down to the gate to caress him, and sometimes lifted him over and set him on Psyche's back, who seemed to know that, with such a delicate, precious burden, she must be very gentle, and paced slowly about, now and then looking back, as if to see that he was securely seated.

A few rods above the parsonage a noisy, brawling brook makes its way over a huge race, that covers nearly an acre of ground; in the summer it dwindles to an insignificant stream and a small pool of muddy water; but in the spring, when swollen by the melting snows, it runs with a swift current, and in some places the lake is quite deep. A path is laid out around it, and a flight of rude steps up the side of the rock lead to a shady walk above, much frequented by villagers on summer evenings.

Oct. 22. 25 King Street.

THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongst washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.

It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleaning Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flannel, &c. It makes Hard Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head, by dissolving a teaspoonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.

If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and heavy washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not injure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improve them—by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flannels become white and soft like new. White things are much improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with PICKSTONE'S Cleansing Crystal.

Sold by most respectable Grocers and Chemists, in Packets THREE CENTS EACH, sufficient for 20 Gallons of water, or Twelve for Thirty Cents, also in Boxes containing 144 Packets, price Three Dollars each. ☞ Be sure to ask for PICKSTONE'S Washing Crystal, as there are spurious imitations. Do not condemn it untried. Make one trial! PROTECTED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.
