A Double Blessing-How it Came.

Deacon Gray had a habit-and he carried it through life with him -of making the wants and sufferings of others in some sort his own. The habit, or whatever else it might be called, certainly increased with his years, and his worthy helpmeet, during the long period of their wedded life, through the influence of assimilation, and above all, the heavenly fruits of a sanctified sorrow had grown to be modeled very nearly after the same

So when the Deacon sat down one wild, stormy evening, paper and spectacles in hand, and related "the news," which was in everybody's mouth as they seated themselves around cheerful teatables, and blazing fires, or gathered in social knots, at the village store, Mrs. Gray ceased to rock back and forth in her arm-ceair, cushioned with hen's feathers, and dropped her knittingwork, quite regardless of the little black and white kitten at her side, which instantly put the ball to the use a feline fancy suggested.

"And what will become of Jerry?" Fifty other people that day had asked the same question, but coming from good Mrs. Grav's honest, motherly heart, the very words sounded differently, like the same tune playing in dissimi-

The Deacon's eye, as it sought the open paper, fell on the shipping list, but it was quickly withdrawn, as if the glance pained him. His answering remark most persons would have thought a very decided digression from the subject.

"It was just three years to-night, Mary, since we heard our boy was drowned. We were expecting him home from that long voyage, and you put on your best silk dress that he bought for you in Canton, and set the tea-table with the China set."

Mrs. Gray's eyes sought the burning embers, which flashed and flickered, and glowed as they did on that never-to-be-forgotten night; and puss made another tangle in the yarn,

A pain, sharp, bitter, choking, strangled her reply. William was their only son, the pride of their hearts, a bright-eyed, merry boy. But he was born-within sight of the sea, and from his earliest childhood, when he built mimic ships, that made wonderful voyages over mimic oceans, all his thoughts and desires centered on the blue heaving waves with a strange fascination, which his parents, much as they loved him, could not

So William went to sea. It almost broke his mother's heart, but when he came home from his first voyage, looking so handsome and manly, with the rich healthful color flushing his bronzed cheek, it throbbed with such pride and joy, as only mothers' hearts know.

He had a story to tell. Far away from home, but with all its sweet influences hovering around his pathway like so many guardian angels, pacing the deck in the starry tropical right watches, God had met him; not in flame, not in the earthquake nor in the whirlwind, but in the "still small voice" of love. The prayers of Deacon Gray and his wife were answered, and William went back to his ship, that most noble sight on God's earth, an open-handed, open-hearted Christian sailor.

Then came the shock. It traced broad furrows on the good Deacon's kindly face, lowered his tall, straight form, and silvered his wife's brown hair; but we draw a veil over that fearful night, so fresh in the memories of both. Their's was a red sorrow, and it yielded the "peaceable fruit of righteousness."

"Do you think any of our William's clothes that you keep in the red trunk, would do for Jerry, with a little fixing," inquired the Deacon, clearing his voice, which had grown husky. We will not transcribe gentle Mrs. Grav's reply nor relate the long conversation that followed extending into the "wee, small hours of the night." Suffice it to say that on the morrow, the Deacon's horse and team took a journey to the MESSRS. S. W. Fowle & Son. hovel where Jerry lived.

The poor boy was crouching on a straw pallet, in one corner, resisting all endeavors, stern or kindly, to induce him to quit his wretched home, that was home no longer. His father had deserted him when an infant; his mother, in her thirst for liquor, forgot all her maternal instincts, and died one cold, stormy night from the effects of drinking.

Jerry must go to the poor house the neighbors said; but Jerry had another mind about the matter, and half frightened at the crowd of strange faces, looked about him with a pinched, hungry face, and eyes like those of a wild animal at bay. They pitied him, and disliked to employ force; but while deliberating what method to pursue, Deacon Gray entered the hut, and made his way through the crowd, straight to Jerry.

"My poor boy, I am sorry for you. If you don't want to go to the poor house, perhaps you will like to go home with me. I have no little boy, and I want one. You shall have some nice clothes to wear if you will come."

The Deacon waited for no answer. He saw the quick, eager look of the boy's face, the yielding, trustful clasp of his little hand, and drove away with him. Mrs. Gray met them it the door of the pleasant farm-house.

"Take these dirty duds off the first thing, Mary," said her husband, "and give him his supper; and then he'll do."

Mrs. Gray was not slow in obeying the advice. Her heart warmed to the poor, forsaken boy, as his eyes rested on her face with a shy, timid gaze, hungry for new draughts of the love that had never been his before.

"He would really be pretty," she said to her husband, after the washing and dressing operations were over, "if it weren't for his starved look. But we'll soon remedy that." And slipping into the pantry, she filled the china bowl that William had liked to eat from so well, and set it before

And so, warmed and fed as he had never been in his life before, he went to sleep that night in a pretty little bed-room, with snowy curtains, and such soft, white pillows on which to rest his weary little head, that no wonder he thought

One or two years passed by, and neither the Deacon nor his wife regretted the step. Jerry's warm, gushing love, healed the sore and aching spots in each heart, and though their own lost boy's place was still vacant, and ever would be, they gave the orphan all the parental care and affection that had once been his.

Mrs. Gray proposed to call their adopted son William, but her husband objected. "Our boy is not dead, but sleepeth," he answered. We do not want two Williams in the family;" and his wife said no more.

One night as Jerry was bringing in wood through the back door, a stranger opened the gate, and walked up to the locust bordered path. Jerry had grown to be a fine boy. Kindness and care had worked wonders for him.

"Is Deacon Gray at home?" inquired the stranger.

Jerry answered in the affirmative, and ushered him into the great kitchen, where the Deacon was busied with his inevitable newspaper, while his wife was engaged in preparing the evening meal. Both turned. A deadly paleness overspread Mrs. Gray's cheeks, and she would have fallen

And William told his story. In a fearful storm which had burst over their vessel, in the South Seas, he had fallen overboard, and all the crew supposed him drowned, but he was picked up by some natives in a boat while clinging to a broken spar, and carried to a neighboring island. The natives were kind, but as vessels very rarely approach the shore, it was two or three years beore he succeeded in signalizing a ship.

Who shall paint the scene? They gathered around the tea-table, the reunited, too happy to do anything but look into one another's faces; Jerry's eyes filled with rapturous delight at the return of the new found brother, whose affectionate greeting dispelled all fears that he would regard him as an intruder. And Mrs. Gray looked rom one to the other of her children, feeling that surely God had rewarded her for the hour, when with hot tears blinding her eyes, she had altered William's garments for her adopted son, only thinking of him as lying dead at the bottom of ocean. Was she not doubly blest, and was not her cup of joy "pressed down, shaken together, and ronning over?" With what emotion did she gaze upon her son so miraculously restored!

And the Deacon said, reverently bowing his grey head, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good, and His mercy endureth forever."

And so "it came to pass," that the declining years of Deacon Gray and his wife, were girdled with a double glory and blessing, till, like shocks of corn fully ripe for the harvest, leaning upon a double prop, in the weakness and infirmities of age, they entered into the joy of their Lord .-Congregationulist.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY. For the cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Influenza, Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Predisposition to

This great remedy is too well known, and is performing too much good, to make it necessary to go into an elaborate discussion of its merits. Suffice it to say, that it still maintains its supremacy in curing diseases of the most obstinate character, and that all who suffer from the above complaints, after having tested this remedy, seldom have occasion to resort to other appliances to insure a perfect

LETTER FROM ELDER H. L. GILMAN, A Minister of the Gospel in Vermont. GLOVER, Vt., June 20, 1859.

Gents.-I hereby certify that I have been troubled for several years with a difficulty of the heart and lungs, have applied to several physicians for help, and have tried almost every remedy of the numerous ones which have been recommended, without receiving any assistance; but had been growing weaker and weaker, until, hearing of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry about a year since, I commenced using it, with immediate relief. It has not only restored my lungs to a sound state, but I am entirely relieved of the difficulty or disease of the heart. I have no hesitation in saving that it is the BEST lung medicine before the public, and I cheerfully and conscientiously recommend it to all persons suffering with pulmonary complaints. H. L. GILMAN.

Mrs. Gray's cheeks, and she would have fallen to the floor, but for the supporting arms of the stranger clasped tenderly around her.

"Father, mother!"

Words and voice were enough. It was indeed their lost William.

"My son, hath the sea given up its dead?"

asked the old Deacon, in a husky, tremulous voice.

Saint John Building Society AND INVESTMENT FUND. IN SHARES OF $200 EACH.
Entrance Fee 50 cents, and Transfer Fee 50 cents each per Share. Shares of the ultimate value of $200 each. In the issue of this Stock peculiar inducements are offered to capitalists and others seeking a perfectly safe and remunerative rate of Interest, free from the anxiety and doubt incident to investments requiring constant watchfulness, and to enable every one who can save from their income to invest periodically that portion of their savings which overlaps current charges in a common Fund.

Money is received on Deposit from those who do not wish to invest periodically, for which Interest is paid in January and July, at the rate of Six per Cent. per Annum. Advances are made to members (only) to buy, build, or redeem property, upon the security of approved Real Estate, repayable by easy monthly instalments.

Present amount advanced to members, $151,300.

Investing Shares may be taken up at any time, to mature in ten years. Bonus profits belong to these Shares.

Estall business communications must be addressed the Secretary.
