The Samily and the Sarm.

Indian Summer. La I mitera Just after the death of the flowers, And before they are buried in snow, There comes a fistival season, When nature is all aglow-Aglow with a mystical splendor That rivals the brightness of Spring-Aglow with a beauty more tender Than aught which fair Summer could bring.

Some spirit akin to the rainbow Then borrows its magical dyes, And mantles the far spreading landscape In hues that bewilder the eyes. The sun from his cloud shadowed chamber Smiles soft on a vision so gay. And dreams that his favorite children. The flowers, have not yet passed away.

There's a luminous mist on the mountains, A light, zure haze in the air,

As if angels, while heavenward soaring, Had left their bright robes floating there : The breeze is so soft, so caressing, It seems a mute token of love. And floats to the heart like a blessing From some happy spirit above.

These days, so serene and so charming, Awaken a dreamy delight-A tremulous, tearful enjoyment Like soft strains of music at night: We know they are fading and fleeting. That quickly, too quickly they'll end, And we watch them with yearning affection, As at parting we watch a dear friend.

O beautiful Indian Summer ! Thou favorite child of the year. Thou darling who nature enshrines With gifts and adornments so dear ! How fain would we woo thee to linger On mountains and meadows awhile, For our hearts, like the sweet haunts of nature, Rejoice and grow young in thy smile. Not alone to the sad fields of autumn Dost thou a lost brightness restore, But thou bringest a world-weary spirit Sweet dreams of its childhood once more; Thy loveliness fills us with memories Of all that was brightest and best-Thy peace and serenity offer A foretaste of heavenly rest.

Looking through Glass.

"Lucy," said Frank, one day, to his sister, " think cousin James is nothing but a spooney, after all."

"And what is a spooney ?" asked Lucy, smiling. "O, you know. He knows Latin, and all such things, but he don't know anything that's worth knowing. When we were on the pond, vesterday. I told him to take hold of the rudder; and what do you suppose he did? He took the oar. Now. if that is not being a spooney, what is ?" " Then that is your definition of a spooney, is it ?" "Yes. You know any one may be smart enough, and yet know nothing about practical

"And now," said Frank, " what about the glass " "O, I'm just coming to it," said James, " After they have mixed the sand and potash and lead, elc., all together, they put the mass into these furnaces. The fire is never allowed to die out, and you may believe they are hot. I think it takes six weeks to heat them hot enough to use. All around the furnace are openings that they call glory holes,' where you can look in Then men come with long iron rods, and put them into the melted glass, and take out some of it on the ends of the rods. These rods are hollow, and they blow into them, and the glass then puffs out into just the shape they want. I tried to blow, myself, but I blew too hard; and although I only had a little piece on the rod, it puffed out as big as a pumpkin, and it was the funniest shape ! They have to learn to blow steadily."

"Then you wasted the glass. Did they like that ?" asked Frank.

"Oh, that was no matter," said James ; " when they break glass, the only loss is the loss of work - for the pieces are put right in with the cullet, and melted over again.'

"What is cullet ?" asked Lucy. "Broken glass," said James. "They always have barrels and barrels of it. They send boys around the city to gather up all the pieces they can find."

" Can they blow a whole pitcher, for instance, with the handle on it, all at once?" inquired Frank.

"Of course not," replied James, "there is hardly anything that can be blown entire, unless it is lamp chimneys. They blow a little, and then roll the glass over and over on a smooth iron table, then they blow a little more, and so on. Then they take big shears and cut off the parts they don't want. With these shears they do ever so many things. For instance, in making a goblet, they make a little hole with the point, and keep turning them around and around till they get it big enough for the mouth of the goblet. Then they do just the same with the foot of the goblet, only they don't make it so large, and take the side of the shears and smooth this down, till, to I there is a standard."

(To be concluded in our next.)

March 4.

"But James is two years younger than you, and has never been in the country before." "Well, I guess I should have known better than that, if I'd never heard of the country," replied Frank, rather contemptuously.

Lucy said nothing more at the moment, but waited till the children were all assembled in the sitting-room, after tea. Then she said to James. "Did I not hear you say you had been to visit some glass works, a week or two before you came here ?'

"Yes; I went with Uncle John."

"I wish you would tell me something about them," continued Lucy. "I have never seen anything of the kind." "Well," said James, "in. the first place, of course, you go into the great rooms where the sand is heaped up."

"What's the sand for ?" asked Frank.

"To make the glass, of course," said James, rather scorofully.

Frank looked a little abashed. " If they make glass out of sand," said he, "I think this would be a splendid place to make it, for here is the whole sea shore, with such nice, white sand."

"Pooh !" said James; "they wouldn't look at such sand as this to make glass. It would be too eoarse for barn windows."

"Perhaps they refine it," suggested Frank. " don't know where they could get any better."

"O, there are pleuty of places. This that we saw came from Berkshire county, where there are whole hills of fine, white sand, which looks almost like snow. Then they have to mix other things with it to make glass."

"Yes," said Frank, " water, I suppose, to boil it down."

James tried hard not laugh, but could not help it.

"I don't remember everything; but one of the principal things is potash, and for nice glass, red lead. And O, Lucy, you ought to see the lead! They have great bars of it, and it looks as dull as you please. But they put it into great ovens, that are heated so hot you can't staud within a such a beautiful color. A man stands with a long iron rod, and works it over and over. O, 1 wish you could see it! Uncle John said that even vermillion did not begin to express the depth and splendor of it; and it varies from silver to scarlet. It is perfectly beautiful! O, then-I forgot-1 suppose I ought to have told you, in the first place, how they make the pots for melting the glass. They have a peculiar kind of clay which comes from Germany, I believe, and this they put into the great bins. And how do you suppose they get all the air out of it ?" "I suppose they have some enormous great press," suggested Frank. "No," said James; "they tried to use a machine, but found it wouldn't answer. The men tread out the clay barefooted. They tread, tread, tread, all day long, and there is nothing like it for making the clay compact and pressing out all the

"How dreadful !" said little Mary ; " I shouldn't want to do that."

"Nor I," said James; " but the men said they liked it well enough. Then they take the clay and knead it, just like bread, and make it jato long rons, and make the pots of these, pressing them on, one by one with their hands. So the pots are very strong; and they let them stand and dry six months before they use them, or else they would crack as soon as put into the furnaces. They are the funniest looking things! It was as good as going to to a menagerie. There was a great room full of these pots that were drying, and they look for all the world like elephants that ad lost their trunks."-

"I should think," said Lucy, "that even after they are dry they would be likely to crack when
