"I can take care of myself, thank you," said You'd better let me come with you, Emily, coming on, and you're not well used to our downs, you know."

"I can find my way, thank you," returned Emily in the same short, sharp tone, in which she had spoken first.

urged her cousin Ben : " There's a thick for

Ben walked to the cottage door with a troubled face, and looked out upon the broad expanse of green slopes over which the dense grey mists were settling down. It was a still evening in October; not a breeze was stirring to chase away the heavy vapors : all day they had been gather ing in the close, humid air, and as the evening advanced they grew thicker and thicker. The lad turned back into the snug little room where his mother sat silently by the fire, while Emily, with her skirts tucked up and an umbrella grasped firmly in her hand, wore an air of defiance and self-assurance which be understood well enough. Ben Murrell's mother understood it too, and she knew that Emily was about to set off on her lonely walk in a bad spirit. Mrs. Murrell had been giving her orphan niece some kind and judicions advice; but it was distasteful to the girl. and she had not scrupled to let her aunt see that she would not take it. Emily had just decided on giving her mistress warning, having a desire (as she said) "To better herself." Her place, a comfortable and respectable one, had been ob tained for her by Mis. Murrell, and the good woman could not see any reason for this desire to leave it. " But, aunt, I shall be much better off at Brigham Lodge," Emily had argued, " and you know I'm certain of going there.

"HI don't altogether like your going to Brigham Lodge," Mrs. Murroll had rejoined; "it's better for a young girl to be where there's a mistress. Captain Ryan is a good sort of man, I believe but the Lodge is always crowded with gay gen tlemen in the shooting season, and I'm sure it's not the situation your poor mother would have liked for you, my dear.'

And to this Emily had responded shortly-1 can take care of myself."

"There isn't one of us who can do that, my child," said her aunt, gravely. And then a long silence followed, until Emily rose to take her de-

The South Downs, amid which the Murrells' cottage was situated, are a long range of slopes extending from Petersfield (a market town in Hampshire) to the Brighton coast. Thousands of sheep are turned out to graze on the short, sweet grass, and the faint tinkling of their bells often make music there when no other sounds are heard. On summer evenings the tranquility of the scene is very pleasant ;-the endless undulations all around, the absolute repose of stillness. the soft tender green of the turf, only broken here and there by stanted bushes, and the fresh breath of the bracing air - these are things to be enjoyed and remembered. But at the close of a marky antumn day, when the fog bangs its thick wet blanket upon everything, the Downs are not only dreary, but dangerous.

However, had her way been strewn with pit falls from beginning to end, Emily would still have persisted in treading it alone. She again declined her cousin's offer of accompanying her, and after bestowing a chilling kiss upon her aunt's cheek, she quitted the cottage

The dense vapor wrapped itself about her as soon as she stepped out of doors; she could scarcely breathe with freedom, but she walked on rapidly and firmly, her mind still busy with the subject on which Mrs. Murrell had spoken.— It was not until she had gone on for some distance that she began to realize the difficulty and unpleasantness of her way; and after standing still for a few seconds, she turned to look back. There, through the heavy gray curtain of the fog, was the bazy glimmer of a light, and Emily knew that it had proceeded from the cottage she had left. It was not yet too late to retrace her steps; she might steer her course by that feeble ray and reach her aunt's home again in safety. Her clothes were already becoming saturated with wet, and more than one shiver had passed over her: for a moment the girl paused and hesitated. She thought of the cosy room glowing with cheerful firelight, and of the kind faces that would brighten at her return; but the demon of pride was at her ear, whispering, "You told them you could take care of yourself," and with stabborn resolution she turned her back upon the light.

But whither was she going? She had not cal-culated on the difficulties which now beset her; more than once she stumbled over a clump of dwarfed furze bushes, and had much ado to clear her dress from their hold. And still the fog continued as thickly as ever; she could not see one step of the way which lay before her.

After going on blindly for some time, Emily's heart began to fail her. The utter foneliness and misery of her situation struck her painfully, and she began to long for that friendly guidance which she had so haughtily rejected. She turned round. but the light was no longer visible; the chill, gray, impenetrable cloud was on every side. And then a great horror of despair seized on the poor headstrong girl, forcing her to cry out for very anguish. No answer came; it seemed as if the fog deadened the sound of her voice.

Still she resolved on trying to grope her way back to the cottage. It could not be far off, she thought, and perhaps Ben might hear her if she continued to shout for aid. Again and again she called, but the damp air nearly choked her, and very soon her powers were exhausted. Her brain, too, was utterly confused, but, she pressed desperately on and on.

Then came a dreadful sensation of stepping suddenly into empty space, and with one wild hoarse cry, Emily fell headlong; down, down, until sense and sight failed her alike. When Emily recovered consciousness the heavy mists had cleared off, and above her was the dark purple sky, with a tremulous star shining here and there. Looking up she saw that the ground had shelved suddenly and sharply away, and she had fallen over the declivity from a height six or seven feet. Happily there was no rough ground, only the soft, spongy turf received her; and Emity tried to raise herself. But she soon found this to be impossible; a sharp, sickening pain forced her to sink back again, for her right foot was quite

There was no help for it; she must lie there until assistance came The night was infinitely calm and solemn, and all feelings of terror had vanished with the fog, but the poor girl suffered much. In addition to the pain, of her injured foot she had to endure the misery of cramp and stiffered limbs, and her soaked garments chilled her very blood. Still, she was thankful that the dark custain had been withdrawn-it was easier to bear her hardships patiently, lying there in the clear, tranquil starlight, with the pure air blowing softly into her face, than it would have been at the dismal fog had continued to hide God's hear

And there, in her helpless and louely condition,

Emily began to think. She went over that parting talk with her aunt Murrell. She remembered How stabborn and self-confident she had been. How stubborn and self-confident she had been, and what patience and forbearance Mrs. Murrelf had shown! And Ben, too; how sorrowfat he had looked when she had proudly refused his company! All the pangs and troubles which she was now suffering were brought upon her by her own wilfulness; she could blame no one but herself. Tears of regret and repentance filled her eyes as she looked npward to the bright stars.

She thought of Him whose hands had created them and placed them there ages and ages ago. It was his unfailing care, his mighty power, that kept them still in their places; they could not take care of themselves." Tand the remembrance of all God's tender protection and love to the creatures he has made, swept over her spirit ike a breath of the sweet, fresh night-air, dispersing all the lingering vapors of pride and vanity. She began to realize then, for the first time in her life, that the very worst thing which could happen to man or woman would be the withdrawal of his providence from them-the being left "to take care of themselves."

Sweet old verses from the psalms, which were read in her hearing Sunday after Sunday, came back to her now. Words that she had listened to with indifference once, now seemed to fill her soul with love and gratifude:

"For this God is our God forever and ever : He shall be our guide even unto death." And

"My soul hangeth upon thee : Thy right hand hath upholden me." And still again, an ancient prayer which her departed mother had dearly

"Increase and multiply upon us Thy mercy; that Thou being our ruler and guide, we may so pass through things temporal, that we finally lose not the things eternal."

Suddenly, the flashing of a strong light over the lace where she lay startled her out of her musings. there, standing on the very ledge from which she had fallen, and looking eagerly down into the ob-scurity, was her cousin Ben. Emily's heart throbbed so fast with the sense of joy and deliverance that she could scarcely speak.

" Ben, Ben !" she called, feebly, But he had distinguished that the dark heap lying in the turfy hollow was really the wanderer whom he ought, and he was by her side in an instant. "My poor, dear girl," he said, tenderly, " are you hart ?" "Yes; my foot is badly twisted. Oh, how hankful I am to see you, Ben ?"

" I've been searching for you for hours. Mother and I fancied we heard some one calling for help. Let me lift you, Emily. I'm afraid it must burt you to be moved; but I'll be as gentle as I can." He set down his lantern on the grass, and, taking her up in his strong arms, carried her across the green slopes and back to the cottage : for she was far nearer to her aunt's abode than she had believed herself to be. Then followed many weary weeks of pain and liness, and of kind and patient narsing. Mrs. Marrell tended her niece night and day; and the time came when Emily was able to be pillowed up n her bed and speak her carnest gratitude.

"Oh, aunt !" she said, holding the good wo man's hands in her own wasted ones, " what yould have become of me if you had indeed left me ' to take care of myself ?"

She did not leave the cottage until the early pring, when the snow had melted away from the lefts and hollows of the downs, and the bleating of the young lambs came pleasantly to her cars. Then she went back to her former place, and here was no further mention of Brigham Lodge. She staved with her good mistress for three years, doing her duty faithfully, and then she left service altogether. One summer morning she and her cousin Ben were married in the little village church, and the cottage on the downs became Emily's home.

And if you ever pass along the beautiful old coach road which leads from Portsmouth to Lonon you must alight at the Butser Hills and stray far away over the breezy turk amongst the browsing sheep, until you come to Emily's dwelling. She is a middle-aged woman now, and has strapping lads and lasses about her; but she will give you a hearty welcome, and you may hear from her own lips her story of being lost in the fog.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

they were painfully afflicting, have been radically cared in such great numbers in almost every section of the country, that the public scarcely need to be informed of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemies of our race. Often, this unseen and unfelt tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfeebling or fatal diseases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be suddenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by eruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hencethe occasional use of a bottle of this Sarsaparille is advisable, even when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this SARSAPARILLA: St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas. Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Sore Eyes, Sore Ears, and other eruptions or visible forms of Scrofulous disease. Also in the more concealed forms, as Dyspepsia, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Fits, Epilepsy, Neuralgia, and the various Ulcerous affections of the muscular and nervous systems.

Syphilis or Venereal and Mercurial Diseases are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhæa or Whites, Uterine are cured by it, though a long time is required for subduing these obstinate maladies by any medicine. But long continued use of this medicine will cure the complaint. Leucorrhoxa or Whites, Vierine Ulcerations, and Female Diseases, are commonly soon relieved and ultimately cured by its purifying and invigorating effect. Minute Directions for each case are found in our Almanac, supplied gratis. Rheumatism and Gout, when caused by accumulations of extraneous matters in the blood, yield quickly to it, as also Liver Complaints, Forpidity, Congestion or Infianmation of the Liver, and Jaundice, when arising, as they often do, from the rankling poisons in the blood. This SARSAPARILLA is a great restorer for the strength and vigor of the system. Those who are Languid and Listless, Despondent, Sleepless, and troubled with Nervous Apprehensions or Fears, or any of the affections symptomatic of Weakness, will find immediate relief and convincing evidence of its restorative power upon trial.
