The Emerald Brooch.

A STORY FOR THE CRILDREN.

HAVE YOU seen my emerald brooch any where ?" asked Mrs. Goodwin of her husband one morning, after she had been for some time engaged in removing and looking under and into the vases on the mantel-piece and other ornaments which the room contained.

"No; I have not to my knowledge," replied Mr. Goodwin, looking up from his paper; "when did you have it last?"

"The day before yesterday; I wore it at breakfast-time.' "And when did you miss it ?"

"I never thought of it until this morning, when, intending to put it on, I looked into my dressingcase and it was gone,

"Gone! that is just like you, Emma. The thing is only mislaid; empty your drawers and places and it will turn up.

Thus exhorted, the lady retired to make a thorough search; but it was in vain: though the cook and housemaid joined in looking into every possible and impossible place, the missing brooch was nowhere to be found.

Suddenly an idea entered the mind of Mrs. Goodwin; and, returning to the breakfast parlor, she closed the door, and approaching her husband, whispered mysteriously into his ear, the "dress-maker."

"Oh nonsense! you don't suspect her, surely." "She was in my dressing-room on Wednesday, when I changed my dress; I took my brooch off then, and I have never seen it since.'

"I do not think it probable that she took it," said Mr. Good win. " Have you looked into the servant's boxes ?"

"They both offered to let me do so; but, as you know, they have been with us these three years, and are undoubtedly honest." "Where did you meet with Miss Wilson ?-

the dressmaker, I mean." "Mrs. Stacey, our grocer's wife, recommended her, saying that it would be a great charity to give her employment, as she supports her mother, who is in very weak health." Just at that moment a rap at the door was followed by the entrance of a lady and her daughter, a bright, happy-looking girl of about seventeen years of age. Her mother, who was announced as Mrs. Selwyn, appeared near forty; she might be vonnger, but a look of sorrow had settled upon features naturally pleasing. "We were discus ing rather a disagreeable affair," said Mrs. Goodwin. Then, narrating her loss and her suspicions, she added, "But you know it is so unpleasant to have to charge any one with such a thing." "It would be only fair to search the whole house thoroughly before doing so," replied the ladr. "I have already searched it, I assure you; and as I have engaged the girl for the whole week. I must speak to her about it, if only in order to send her away, for I feel sure that she must have "Suppose, then," said Mr. Goodwin, "that we send for her, and question her on the subject.' In answer to the summons, in a few minutes a young girl entered. She was slight and delicatelooking. Her pale complexion showed the effect of long hours of toil, while her shabby dress spoke of poverty; yet there was an engaging expression and a look of innocence that contradicted the impression of her guilt. On being informed of Mrs. Goodwin's suspicions her wan features became crimson, and she answered indignantly, "It is the first time I have ever been accused of dishonesty. Poor we are, but mother would rather die of want than live on what was not honestly come by." Then bursting into tears, and looking at Mrs. Selwyn, on whose countenance she read compassion, she cried: "O! prav. ladies, do not think me guilty of such a terrible thing! do not condemn me without proof!"

"We do not condemn you," said Mr. Goodwin, " for it is possible the brooch may yet be found; nor have we any intention of taking severe measures. We must trust to time to clear up the mystery; but you had better leave at once.'

Weeping bitterly, the poor girl quitted the room, and Mrs. Selwyn and her daughter watched her passing the window, as with siow and almost failing steps she took ber way home.

on a low stool at Mrs. Selwyn's feet, as was her custom to do for the hour that followed dinner. "dear mamma, you look paler and more sorrowful than usual. Are you ill?"

" Not, my dear, not in body, but"-

"O, I know, mamma; you are thinking of my little sister, whom you lost when we were both almost babies. It was very sad; I often feel sorry a twin sister, too. Tell me about her, mamma," "Not to-day, my dear; I am not equal to it. I am disturbed about that poor young woman." "Do you think that she took the brooch, mamma ?"

"I cannot say; poverty is a sore temptation. She has a sick mother, too."

"O, mamma, if you were to be ill and in poverty, what should I do?" "Not steal, I hope," said Mrs. Selwyn; "but something in that young girl's looks seems at variance with such an idea. I cannot believe her guilty."

"Nor I either, mamma; but do you think Mrs. Goodwin paid her? Perhaps her poor mother may be wanting necessaries; can we not send them something ?" "It would be better to go and take it," replied the lady; "we should be able to form a more correct judgment of them." "O, do let us! It is only half-past four; there will be plenty of time; Mrs. Stacey will tell us where they live. May I order the carriage?" "Do so, my dear, we will go at once."

In less than three quarters of an hour Mrs. Selwyn and her daughter were set down before one of a row of small houses in a mean suburb. The door being opened by a woman, who appeared to have been engaged in washing, they ascended the narrow, uncarpeted staircase, and entered a small back bedroom. All bore the depressing stamp of poverty, yet all was clean, and there was an ef-fort to save appearances that was even touching in its melancholy effect.

The first object upon which their eyes fell was the invalid, reclining upon the truckle bed, covered with a faded patch-work quilt. Her hand rested on an open Bible, her face exhibiting the pallor of illness, but her eyes were lit up with an expression of faith in God. By her side sat the young dressmaker, her eyes red with weeping, vet still occupied with some needle-work, about which ber hauds were busy.

Apologizing for her intrusion, Mrs. Selwyn said, "I wished to see Miss Wilson again, because I have some work which I can give her to do at

"O, madam, then you do not believe it true that she stole Mrs. Goodwin's brooch?" "From her looks and manner I own I trust

"God bless you, ma'am, for saying so. She never did it."

"I believe," said Mrs. Selwyn, "that so good a daughter would surely not be guilty of such an

"A daughter, ma'am, did you say ! Yes, she has been one to me."

"Is she not really your child?"
"No, ma'am." "Whose, then, is she?" asked Mrs. Selwyn, looking earnestly at the young girl.

"I cannot tell, ma'am; I do not know."

then, where did you find her?" "I did not find her, ma'am; she was left here by a gipsy woman, who died in this room just before I came. She owned to having stolen her from some place in the country, in order to go begging with. They was a going to send the poor little dear to the workus, but my little husband (he was alive then) said, &Sally, let us take her and bring her up; we have none of our own; may hap she may be a blessing to us.' And so she has, working night and day to give me a bit of bread, since I fell down one frosty day and give myself a sprain, and have never been well since." During this recital Mrs. Selwyn had sat with clasped hands, breathlessly intent on every word. At last she asked, "What year did this happen?" "It is set down here in the Bible; and I have often and often tried to find out where the gipsy woman came from; but there was nothing to guide me, only a little cross which was tied round the child's neck." "Let me see it," said Mrs. Selwyn. On being shown a small ivory cross with the letters M. S. upon it, she exclaimed, "It is the same! I put it one to distinguish one child from the other.'

"It is exactly like mine," said Anna Selwyn, producing one similar, with the letters A. S. "God be thanked!" exclaimed Mrs. Selwyn. have found my darling. O! I always felt that I should hear of her."

It was the month of June. London was thronged; foreigners from various climes, in various costumes, mixed with artisans and country people, filled the magnificent and spacious area the second Great Exhibition.

In one of the refreshment rooms, on a sofa a little apart from the rest, sat a lady and her two daughters. They were fashionably and elegantly attired, and so much alike that it was difficult, on a first glance, to distinguish from the other. On a closer inspection it was observable that, though both were handsome and graceful, the expression of one was pensive almost to sadness. Both her and sister seemed to regard her with looks of peculiar tenderness and anxiety.

"My love," said Mrs. Selwyn, for it was that " you do not enjoy this gay scene as I hoped you would have done."

"Forgive me, dear mamma," replied the young lady, "if, in spite of your kindness, both to me and her who took care of me in childhood, I cannot help remembering that a shameful accusation still hangs over me, and that, were it known, must be a disgrace to you and my sister."

"But you have been away two years, dear Ma rion. You have been in Paris, you have had the best of masters, and are so altered that no one could recognize in you"-here Anna smiled archly --" the one who long ago occupied so different a position in life."

"And," added her mother, "as God has been so good as to restore you to us, let us trust in His mercy to clear up the mystery in His own good

"Yes, indeed," replied Marion, brightening up, I know you are right; I fear I am very ungrateful, as Mrs. Selwyn used to say when we were at Selwyn Park, and you and dear Anua tried so much to make me happy. But O, mam-

· On looking at her daughter Marion, Mrs. Selwyn saw that she had become alarmingly pale, and was near fainting. Turning, in order to discover the cause, she saw that Anna was speaking to a lady and gentleman whom she recognized as Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin. They advanced to greet her, not observing Marion, whose face was hidden by the foliage of an exotic shrub, which stood close

"Mrs. Selwyn, how glad I am to meet you," said Mrs. Goodwin. "I have so wished to see you again, but I heard that you had gone on the Continent; and there was an extraordinary tale affoat that you had discovered a daughter who had been stolen in her infancy from your place in the country. But I suppose there was no truth in it, for I heard no particulars, and people do

"It was quite true. You shall hear the par-ticulars another time," replied Mrs. Selwyn, who, pale and agitated, was almost unable to speak. Then recovering herself, with a sudden impulse, she asked, "Did you ever find your emerald brooch ?"

"O dear, yes; about a fortnight after I found "Mamma," said Anna Selwyn, when she sat it sticking on one of the green damask curtains of my dressing-room, and I recollected putting it there myself when I took off my dress to have the new one tried on. It had quite gone out of my mind when I thought it was lost."

"But how did you recompense the poor girl whom you accused of stealing it, Mrs. Goodwin?" "I sent to her lodging directly, but both she and her mother had left; the people of the house myself; I should so have loved to have a sister, | could tell me nothing, except that they went away at night in a cab. That is the reason I so much wished to see you, as Mrs. Stacey told me you had asked her for their address. I fancied you might know something about them.'

"And supposing that you did discover them, how could you indemnify that poor child for the pain you have caused her to suffer ?" "She is already compensated," said Marion, coming forward, her countenance radiant with

I shall not attempt to describe Mrs. Goodwin's confusion and astonishment, on fluding that the poor victim of her thoughtlessness was identical with the charming co-heiress of the rich Mrs.

But Marion taking her hand said, "Do not be inhappy, Mrs. Goodwin. The Almighty chose that means of restoring me to my friends, and so bringing good out of evil; only, in future, should you mislay anything, you will not I know, be too

CAUTION! CAUTION! THE Proprietor of PICKSTONE'S WASHING AND CLEANSING CRYSTAL, deems it his duty to caution the public against spurious imitations of his highly celebrated Washing Crystal, which is the most harmless compound extant. It is free from Lime, Vitriol, and all other deadly mixtures so common to be found amongs washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal washing compounds. Try Pickstone's Washing Crystal, if you want ease, comfort, and economy in washing, which washes every thing, and has rapid sale.

It will be found invaluable for the following domestic purposes, viz.:—It washes all fine things, such as Muslin Lace, Crotchet Work, Baby Linen, &c.; cleaning Sponges, Combs, and Brushes; removing stains from the hands, and grease from Carpets, Cloth, Flanuel, &c. It makes Hard Water Company of the compound of the company of the compound of the company of the com Water Soft, and may be used with good effect in Baths, as it immediately removes all condensed perspiration from the skin. A small quantity should also be used in the foot pan. It forms a cooling and cleansing wash for the head by dissolving a teaspnonful of the Crystal in a quarter of a pint of water; and for cleansing the Mouth, Teeth, and Gums, it is quite a luxury, by adding a teaspoonful to a tumbler of water. It renders linen beautifully white, and unlike other preparations, at the same time preserves the fabric. It contains nothing injurious to life. A child eating it by mistake, will not be injured.

If you have not used this Cleansing Crystal, lose no time in obtaining it. Nothing has ever been introduced into this country which has effected such a wonderful change upon Washing Days. It saves your time—saves change upon washing Days. It saves your time saves your clothes—saves your money; and it does not injure the most delicate hands. Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal makes washing a pleasure, reduces the cost of fuel, the wear and tear of labor, and improves every article washed. For Linens, and heavy washes, it cannot be surpassed; for Laces, and fine fabrics, it is unequalled. It does not injure the color of Prints, but strengthens and improve them-by its use they retain their original brilliancy. Flan-nels become white and soft like new. White things are much improved, and keep their color, even if put by for months. Thousands of Families made happy! No misery on a Washing Day, with Pickstone's Cleansing Crystal.

Sold by most respectable Grocers and Chemists, in Packets There Cents Each, sufficient for 20 Gallons of water, ets Three Cents Each, sufficient for 20 Gallons of water, or Tweive for Thirty Cents, also in Boxes containing 144 Packets, price Three Dollars each. [27] Be sure to ask for Pickstone's Washing Crystal, as there are spurious imitations. Do not condemn it uptried. Make one trial! Pacted by Act of Parliament.

We can speak of the merits of the Waters' Pianos from personal knowledge as being of the very best quality.—Christian Intelligencer:

Our friends will fud at Mr. Waters' Store the very best assortment of Pianos, Me'odeons and Organs to be found in the United States.—G aham's Magazine.

Musical Dongs.—Since Mr. Waters gave up publishing sheet music, he has devoted all his capital and attention to the manufacture and sale of Pianos and Melodeons. He has just issued a catalogue of his new instruments, giving a new scale of prices, which shows a marked reduction from former rates, and his Pianos have recently been awarded the First Premum at several Fairs. Many people of the present day, who are attracted, if not confused, with the flaming advertisements of rival piano houses, probably overlook a modest manufacturer like Mr. Watters; but we happen to know that his instruments carned him a good reputation long before Expositions and 'honors' connected therewith were ever the ght of; indeed, we have one of Mr. Waters' Pianos now in our residence, where it has stood for years, of which any manufacturer in the world might well be proud. We have always been delighted with it as a sweet toned and powerful instrument, and there is no doubt of its durability; more than this, some of the best amateur players in the city, as well as several celebrated pianusts, have performed on the said piano, and all pronounce it a superior and first class instrument. Strongerendorsement we could not give.—Home J urnol.

Horace Waters, 431 Broadway, is famed for the excellence of his Pianos and Organs.—Even ng Post.

The Waters' Piano ranks with the best manufactured in Americs.—The Independent, N. F.
