in attendance, including all from New Brunswick, excepting Ferris, Smith, Anglin and Hutchison, Mr. Pickard was introduced by Messrs. Bolton and Burpee, and took his seat.

In Parliament the Address in reply was moved by Simpson, seconded by Bolton, in brief speech.

The several paragraphs of the Address were all passed before 5 o'clock. Buckley was to day put on trial at the Assizes for complicity in the McGee murder. The evidence being heard, J. H. Cameron, who defended, argued that there was not sufficient proof to justify putting the case in the hands of jury. The Court decided that the evidence was not sufficient, and summarily discharged the prisoner. Buckley went home with his wife, followed by a crowd of sympathisers. He has been recently supposed to be partly insane, but seemed all right when liberated.

The Bill for the dis establishment was again brought up for discussion on the 16th inst. At amendment was moved by Mr. Newpegate (Conservative). A lively debate followed, in which severa of the members took part.
At the end of this discussion, which lasted six pours, Mr. Gladstone rose, and said due care would be given by the Government to the terms of the provision made for Maynooth College. He attributed much of the opposition to the bill to the power of the clergy in Ireland. That power had been built up by the old policy of England, which has lately been partially reversed, and was now about to be finally and completely abandoned. He concluded by saying that the success of the bill was not a question of party but of justice.

Mr. Disraeli followed. He disapproved of a division on Mr. Newdegate's motion for postponement, and said he was anxious to go into committee on the

the bill and adjourned.

On the 17th inst. the debate was resumed, when Mr. Disraeli moved to omit the following clause from "On and after the 1st day of January, 1871, the said union created by an Act of Parliament between the Churches of Eugland and Ireland shall be dissolved, and the Church of Ireland hereinafter referred to, as said Church shall cease to be Established

Mr. Disraeli supported his proposition in a speech of considerable length, contending that the above clause destroyed the supremacy of the Crown, and placed the Church at a disadvantage.

Mr. Gladstone also made a speech against the mendment. He traversed the statements made by Disraeli. He thought, notwithstanding this clause, that the supremacy of the Crown would continue to exist, but in an altered form. If this amendment were successful, it would absolutely destroy the bill. The union of the churches would continue, but that union must not be enforced by Parliamentary bonds.

Mr. Disraeli replied. He admitted that his intention was to aim a mortal blow at the bill, but if the motion were accepted, the Government would still continue their disendowment policy. The House decided on Mr. Disraeli's motion as follows-for, 201; against, 344. Government majority
