Lesson 4.—April 24.

Luke 12: 13-21.

COVETOUSNESS.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Take heed, and beware of covetousness.

Luke 12: 15.

TOPIC.—A Lesson of Folly.

DAILY READINGS.—Monday, Luke 12: 13-21. Tuesday, Acts 5: 1-11. Wednesday, Josh. 7: 10-25. Thursday, Matt. 23: 1-12. Friday, Acts 12: 20-24. Saturday, Exod. 32: 1-8. Sunday, 2 Kings 21: 1-10.

NOTES.

Vs. 13.—A certain one. Clearly not a disciple; he was a man from the multitude, who, drawn by the fame of the Lord's miracles and instructions, comes to avail himself of these, not for his spiritual, but for his temporal interests; not for the good of his soul, but of his body. He comes to him who held at his disposal the riches of heaven and the boon of everlasting life, and begs his interposition on behalf of mere earthly, temporal and material pleasures.—Did my brother, whether it was a younger brother who sought a portion of what had been left to the elder; whether he had been wronged or not by his brother, it is left to conjecture. The point of his ally consists in this, that, when the giver of eternal life was present, he should have lost sight of that in his anxiety for mere worldly good. It is his neglect of the spiritual in his anxiety for the temporal, that laid him open to the Lord's rebuke.

Vs. 14.—Man. The mode of address implies rebuke.—Who appointed me? Interrogative form of emphatic denial. No one, either God or man.—Judge: to decide cases of worldly litigation; divider: to carry out and execute the decision; the particular form of action being determined by the case in hand. Our Lord came as a religious teacher, and only directly as a social reformer. He taught principles which underlie and originate all reforms, but refrained from direct interference with social and political evils. He refrained from judging the woman taken in adultery (John 8), and from pronouncing on the question of Jewish taxation under the Romans. On moral and religious questions, as of marriage and divorce, he was outspoken.

Vs. 15.—The preceding case—with whichever of the brothers rested the immediate fault—naturally suggested the evils of covetousness, and the Lord improves the occasion for a lesson to the people. He said to them: the multitude around him.—All covetousness: Rather, all greed, all longing, after more, whether wealth, power, or any more earthly goods, because not in the abundance, etc.

The construction here is somewhat doubtful, but the general meaning is clear. A man's life, that is his real, inner and higher life, does not consist in any superabundance of earthly possessions. It does not come from possessions, and by no means consists in any superfluity of them. The man of Scripture is "having food and raiment, therewith to be content."

Vs. 16.—A parable. A supposed case, to illustrate the vanity of riches. The field: The farm. It is the case of a thrifty and prosperous husbandman, whose fields are productive, whose gains are legitimate, and his arrangements for taking care of them, perfectly proper; it is the spirit with which he does it, his resting in them, and failing to look beyond them, that constitutes his folly and his wickedness.

Vs. 17, 18.—Saying in himself, that shall I do? Our Lord's parables are always very dramatically presented. We see the inner heart of the man, and the processes by which their conclusions are reached. It is exceedingly life-like. The husbandman's perplexity, his question, his final resolution, come vividly before us. The solution is a natural and proper one; to pull down his intricate store houses and build larger and more simple ones, that is the proper thing for his "fruits," that is the product of his fields and his goods—his earthly things, all that his simple position yield and embrace.

Vs. 19.—I will say to my soul. The man, as the seat of the affections and passions, is, by a very common figure of speech, called "my soul and I." Whittier's "My Soul and I" is abstracted from the person and apostrophized. We have here a vivid and noble expression of the person's serene and absolute contentment in the present, and his utter thoughtlessness of the future.—Soul, they belong to thee, are they thy enjoyment.—Much goods: exactly, "many good things;" that is needed.—For many years.

period indefinitely long; a sort of earthly immortality, beyond which he does not care to look.—Rest thyself: and from labor.—Eat, drink, and be merry: be glad, with all the outward tokens of gladness; as in chap. 13: 12.—Let us eat and be merry: and let us begin to be merry, to gladden ourselves. The symptoms (absence of the conjunction) enhance the liveliness and vigor of the construction.

Vs. 20.—But God said to him.

Continuance of the dramatic style of the representation. First we have what the man said to his soul, promising to it long years of enjoyment; now in contrast, we have what God said to him, cutting short this fond dream of earthly felicity. We need find no difficulty as if God's "saying to him" expressed simply the fore-ordaining purpose of God, or as if he were saying to him through the secret whisperings of conscience. In the parabolic drama, God is introduced as the counter-speaker, to show in the vivid manner the folly and short-sightedness of the self-satisfied worldling. He purposed one thing; God purposed another. Man supposes: God disposes. It is dramatically exhibited as the direct utterance of God.—Thou fool! Unintelligent, senseless one, acting as one void of reason.—On this night. In most emphatic contrast with the "for many years" of the deluded worldling. In reality if the summons to his soul were delayed a year, or a hundred years, it would make no essential difference as against the eternity beyond. But the immediateness of the summons—this night—sharpens the antithesis, and renders more forcible the rhetoric.—They demand from thee. Probably equivalent to "Thy soul is demanded of thee." The soul to which thou makest such promise of long years of luxury is demanded of thee—summed away from thee—at once. Nothing is said of the destiny of the soul, when thus forcibly withdrawn, though, of course, much is implied. It is, at least, cut off from its earthly sources of enjoyment. The "they" may be conceived as God's ministers (possibly angels) through whom he is conceived as taking life. The point of the statement is that the soul which had flattered itself with the dream of almost endless earthly good, is liable to be instantly and forever hurried away from it.—Whose shall it be? No matter whose it shall be; the stress of the assertion is, "It shall not be thine. The goods you have laboriously prepared shall go over to another."

Vs. 21.—Thus saith the Lord. Such is his condition; such his destiny: so liable to the utter frustration of his plans and hopes.—Heareth treasure for himself. Gathereth treasure which is legitimate, but for selfish and worldly ends, which is not legitimate.—Rich towards God. Rich in spiritual blessings; in the favor and love of God and heir of his kingdom and glory. The reference is not to one who has earthly riches but uses them so as to secure heavenly treasure (though such a one is rich towards God), but to one who, with or without earthly possession, has a treasure in the love and favor of God.

Notice.

The 1st. Annual Session of the Southern N. B. Baptist Association will be held in St. George, Charlotte Co. on Tuesday the 14th day of June next. All churches included in this Association are requested to appoint their delegates at as early a date as convenient, and send their names to the undersigned. Provision will be made for each delegate who will be notified of the same on receipt of his name. We trust that all the Churches in the Association will be largely represented.

Signed in behalf of the Church, J. MORTON O'BRYEN, Pastor, St. George Church, Clerk.

Year Book.

Quite a number of copies still remain on hand, and any churches who have not received copies or may wish more, can be supplied to a limited extent by addressing Visitor office, St. John.

NEVER RETURN. It is said that one out of every four men invalids who go to Denver, Col., to recover health never return to the East or South except as corpses. The undertaker, next to the hotel keeper, has the most profitable business. This excessive mortality may be prevented and patients saved and cured under the care of friends and loved ones at home, if they will but use Hop Bitters in time. This we know. See other column.

The Common Expression, "I feel as if I had dropped," "My food don't digest," "I do not feel for anything," which we so often hear during the Spring and early Summer months are conclusive evidence that the majority of people require at that season especially a reliable medicine that will strengthen the organs of digestion, stimulate the circulation of the blood and "tone up" the debilitated constitution. Manning's "Cathartic Wine and Iron," taken according to directions, produces buoyancy of spirits, vigor of mind and gives lasting strength to the whole system.
