CHRISTMAS.
 What shall I give to thee, O Lord?
 The things that came of old
 And softly on thy cradle rude
 Their myrrh, and gems and gold.
 The martyrs gave their hearts' warm
 Blood;
 Their ashes strewed the way;
 They spurned their lives as dreams and dust
 To speed thy coming day.
 They offer thee nor life nor death,
 Our gifts to man we give;
 O Lord, on this thy day of birth,
 Oh, what dost thou receive?
 You know'st of sweet and precious
 Things,
 My store is scant and small;
 Wert thou here in want and woe;
 Lord, I would give thee all!
 Show me thyself in flesh once more;
 Thy feast I long to spread;
 Bring the water for thy feet,
 The ointment for thy head.
 When came a voice from heavenly heights
 "Unclose thine eyes, and see!
 Gifts to the least of those I love,
 Thou givest unto me."

Lesson 12.—December 18.
QUARTERLY REVIEW SUGGESTIONS:

(From the National S. S. Teacher.)
 There are several lines along which the Review profitably may be conducted. 1. The Law. Taking this thought, the superintendent can draw at the fact the law aimed at holiness. The required perfect consecration on the part of the people—as shown in their willing offerings for the erection of the tabernacle. It demanded a holy, consecrated place of worship, and a consecrated priesthood, each ceremonial observance exacted of them being only a symbol of the spiritual purity which they should manifest. It would accept of no offerings that had in them a single blemish, their physical perfections being symbolic of the moral perfection it required of the offerers, and for failing to exhibit which the animals were sacrificed. The sins of the people, and even of Moses himself, show how possible it is for man to live perfectly before the law. In this way of conducting the Review, make the law a schoolmaster to bring the scholars to Christ.
 Another method that suggests itself to look into the lessons with regard to discovering types of Christ. Very many have been presented. They will be found in numbers in and around the tabernacle, in the different kinds of offerings, in the serpent lifted up in the wilderness, in the ark that Moses smote, and in the prophecy of Balaam.
 Again an interesting group can be made of the feasts and their prophecies and shadowings. The superintendent will not lack the suggestive lines for review. We only would advise that he should not attempt too many of them.

DESSERTERS.

In the ranks of Sunday-school teachers we notice here and there a gap which used to be filled with a busy, earnest worker. Where is he now? Has he been added to the great list of those who had finished their labors and entered into their rest? Oh no! Listen to the story of one of these men.
 Some years ago a good, Christian young man stood there—there in that vacant spot. He lived in a busy, bustling town. Every day he rose up early and sat up late to obtain the necessities of life; and yet each Sunday found him with a class of little ones gathered round him, to whom he taught the way of life, and the truths of the Bible. Thus he did for several years; but at length domestic or business circumstances obliged him to change his place of residence, and he came to live in one of our pretty little suburban villages. He lived there, settled there, and—he deserted here!—for he never again engaged in Sunday-school work. If you want to find him now on Sabbath afternoons, you must stroll down the country lanes, across the hay-fields, or round by the softly flowing river, and there you will find him with a cigar, or a book, or friend; or, if you fail in the search, you may step quietly into his cosy sitting-room. Hush! there he is stretched on the lounge, all unconscious of the outer wicked world, all unconscious of the boys who are swearing at pitch and toss outside the public house close by, whom he might be teaching. Such is the story of one empty place in the Sunday-school army, and it is but the type of many.

Should this fall into the hands of any deserter, or of any who contemplate turning deserter, just pause a moment and scan these lines, for they apply to you. Deserters are a discredit to an army; you admit this, do you not? You feel an honest indignation that any of your countrymen should desert their colors. And is it not an equal discredit to quit the ranks of God's working army? Does it seem honorable that a change of residence or any such trifling cause should be deemed a sufficient reason for deserting the crimson banner of Christ? Again, deserters are generally dissatisfied men. They often complain of superiors, hard work, and severe, exacting punishment, as excuses for quitting the royal standard; and you curl the lip in contempt as you listen to them, and say, "Soldiers must not be daunted by small inconveniences." But is it not quite as contemptible to make a hot school-room, noisy children, a peculiar superintendent, and a little worldly chaff, excuses for quitting Prince Emmanuel's standard?

Oh, deserters, beware! Stop and consider ere you take your hand from the gospel plough you have hitherto been guiding across the fields of children's precious souls. Stop until you resolve that, God helping you, only death shall separate you from your work.—Sunday-School Chronicle (London).

A good superintendent knows the power of the pulpit. He knows that the Sunday-school is a "school," and that the particular charms and influences of worship and of public discourse, are not secured through its ministrations as they are through the public service. He knows the measure of educational power in the Sunday-school, and he also knows that there are elements of power that the Sunday-school can never possess, and that some of these are found only in connection with the sanctuary. He therefore always talks as though it were as important for every little child to attend public service as to be in the primary or intermediate class. He announces the preaching. His teachers keep a record of all the scholars who attend preaching. He calls for the public recitation of the last text that was preached by the minister. A particularly good point in the last sermon is sometimes repeated by the superintendent before the school. In church he sits where he can watch the members of the school as they may be distributed through the congregation, and little improprieties of behavior are delicately reproved before the school or in private. Through his influence there are more thoughtfulness, reverence and attention in the public congregation; and the singing is heartier. The superintendent teaches his school to pray for the preacher. He says that when ministers go into the pulpit to preach they depend for their success upon the spiritual blessing of the Holy Ghost, and that the hearer also depends upon this blessing for the profit which is to be derived from the sermon. Even little children have been known to lip their prayers at their mother's side that the preacher may have the help of heaven. And this goodly service on the part of the superintendent tells in many ways upon the preacher, the official board, and the congregation at large. It promotes the unity of the church; it promotes in silent ways spiritual power; it gives strength to every department of church enterprise; it avoids anything like collisions and rivalry between church and school; it prevents apathy on the part of both.

The name of John Bright is one that is appreciated on this side of the water almost, if not quite as much as it is in England. Gen. Clinton B. Fisk gives this account of an interesting conversation he had with him relative to Sunday-schools, while riding with him through the streets of London. He said, "That is a great country of yours over there," I replied, "Yes, you're right." "Well," he said, "what a power this Sunday-school movement is." I said, "Yes, indeed." It was just in the gray of a London morning and I turned around and looked him in the face: "What do you know about Sunday-schools?" Said he, "You ought to come to my home and see the three or four thousand Sunday-school teachers that come there from Lancashire and other districts to attend our Sunday-school conventions! and I always make it a point to go and speak to them, and to say the best words I can utter to these Sunday-school teachers." "What interests you so much in Sunday-schools; you are a Quaker,

I believe?" Yes, I am, and our Quakers are very good people." I said, "Yes, I know that." "Well," said he, "there is nothing that can give such stability to this government as the religious instruction of our children in the Protestant Sunday-schools of the realm; and I have read all about them in your country, and the people are going to be safe if you only stand by your Sunday-school men and train up your children in the ways of the Lord." No microscopic statesman ever would have uttered such far-seeing wisdom as that.

THE RETORT OF A COLPORTEUR.
 A number of German farmers one market day were sitting at a long table in an inn, when a colporteur entered. One of the farmers was offered a Bible, and the colporteur began to talk with him. He looked very uneasy, and bought a copy simply to get rid of his tormentor. "But," says the colporteur, "matters grew warm, some jeered and scoffed. One man said, 'We men are no better than beasts; monkeys were our common ancestors, and when we die we shall fare no better and no worse than they.' I said, 'Monkeys were not my ancestors.' 'Who then?' 'I was made in God's image and after his likeness. Had monkeys been my ancestors, possibly I might have thought as you do about God and the future of my soul.' At this retort some laughed, others looked serious, and several took my part and bought Bibles."

THE PADLOCK ON THE LIPS.—Dr. Clemanee relates: "When Messrs. Moody and Sankey were in England, I was trying to do a little work in the inquiry room at one of their meetings, and my attention was especially drawn to a lady whose face was full of trouble. She came to me and told me she was a teacher in a boarding school, and wanted to speak for Christ there, but felt as if she had a padlock on her lips, and could not utter a word. I said, 'Tell no one else what you have told me, and go and tell the Lord Jesus all about it.' We parted, and I saw her a few weeks after, looking bright, serene, and happy. She told me she had taken her burden to Christ and left it with him, and now she could speak to anybody and everybody as opportunity offered."

An infidel, who was a school trustee, would not give the key of the school-house to a Christian lady who desired to hold a Sunday-school in it. Though his denial was rough and even insulting, yet she nevertheless said to him: "I think I am going to get it. I am going to pray over it, and I have found out from experience that when I keep on praying something gives way." The next time she saw him, his hard heart had given way, and he not only handed her the key, but eventually himself took a part in the work of saving souls. The praying that makes something give way is the praying that is worth something.

Consumption Cured.
 An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellow-men. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this receipt, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Send by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. F. Sherar, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.
