SELECT STORY.

CAUGHT BY A GIRL.

I had been brought up in the strictest seclusion in my father's country parsonage, and all my mother's time and care had been bestowed upon me, her only son.

I need hardly say that I had never been from home, and had never contemplated the horrors of such a possibility. My dismay, therefore, may be better imagined than described, when one morning after breakfast, just as I was running off to the poultry-yard, my mother called me back, saying that she and my father wished to speak to me. I couldn't help feeling very guilty, and very conscious of the fact that "Lalla Rookh" was at that moment hidden under my mattress. Was it possible that mamma had seen its circulating library cover peeping out? My heart beat fast, and my face was very red, while I stood to hear what she had to say.

"My dear Clara" (I was 12 years old), your father and I have thought it best to accept for you an invitation to spend a day and night at your good god-father's, Sir Thomas Bullyon, at Golding Park. How shall you like it?"

I had much rather they should have found "Lalla Rookh." I had a horror of strange faces, even when pappa and mamma were present. But the idea of being among strangers, alone in a grand house, for a whole day and night, was insupportable. I wept and entreated in terms such as ought to have melted a heart of stone. But in vain. My parents were, for once, inexorable, and I had to go.

I need not detail all I suffered on my journey, nor during my first day. With all Lady Bullyon's kindness the day dragged wearily on, but I managed to amuse myself tolerably till bedtime, when, after a good-night, I went up to my room, and found, to my horror, that the lady's maid was waiting there to undress me.

"Am I never to be let alone?" I thought.

But I had to submit to her fingers and her tongue, to make up for the silence of mine, I suppose. Among other things she particularly cautioned me not to mistake a rope that hung beside a closet door for a bell-pull. I inquired why?

"Why, miss, the people that lived here before had a raving mad old uncle with a great deal of money, and this was his room, miss, with his keeper. That closet, miss, is a shower bath, with a great big cistern over it, big enough to drown you and me; and when he was more than common fractious his keeper used to lock him in there (you see the key is on the outside) and pull that rope, which let all the water down upon his poor old head till he was half dead. One day when they went to take him out, he was quite dead, and his family got all the money; and it didn't seem to do them much good, seeing that they haven't a penny now, and was obliged to let this house to Sir Thomas, and hide their heads in foreign parts. They do say, miss, that the poor old gentleman may often be seen at night in his shower bath, weeping and bewailing the cruelty of those who killed him. Good night, miss, and I hope you may sleep comfortable."

She had, certainly, not taken the best means to secure that happy result; but though I was so shy, I was not in the least nervous about that sort of thing, and consequently did not trouble myself much about her words. I lay for some time watching the flickering of the fire on the ceiling, thinking of home.

The house had become quiet, everybody must have been to bed, when all at once an odd fancy seized me to look into the shower bath and see what sort of a place it was. I fought against the idea for some time, but finding it kept me awake, I thought it better to indulge it, and after much hesitation, I descended carefully from the bed, and advanced on tip-toe toward the mysterious door.

I had my hand on the handle, when I suddenly heard a slight noise within. My heart stood still. I thought for a moment. What if it should be the old madman's ghost?

But as quickly dismissing so absurd an idea, I remained perfectly still, holding my breath to listen. There! I heard it again, a low rustling, such as would be caused by a person breathing heavily in rather stiff clothes. I had no longer any doubt that some one was hidden there with an evil design. Quick as thought I turned the key so as to lock the door, and seizing the rope which hung close beside, I pulled it violently, at the same time screaming for help. A gasping, struggling shout came from within the closet, and then no sound was to be heard but my own screams and the steady down-pour of the water from the cistern. Soon footsteps were heard coming from all directions; my door was opened, and a confused troop of servants, with Sir Thomas at their head, rushed in. But I still clung to the rope as if for my dear life, screaming, "Don't let him out! Don't let him out! He'll kill you!"

Sir Thomas, in the whitest of night-shirts, and the most wonderful night-cap, with a tassel at the top, stood motionless with astonishment, grasping in one hand a pair of trousers and in the other an old sc
