Says the London World:—"Dukes for the most part are the sport of a malignant destiny. Born to position and to power, they are too often overwhelmed by their own greatness and eclipsed by their own grandeur. Either they feel themselves so much above the common herd of their fellow creatures that they will condescend to no sort of exertion; or, planning their efforts after fame upon a scale which they conceive worthy of a duke, they commit blunders that would discredit a prince. It is a question whether they simply qualify themselves to sit as models for Mr. du Maurier, or whether in their wild strivings after an immortality of renown, they plunge into a series of eccentricities and escapades which give the enemies of the aristocracy occasion to blaspheme. To me there is nothing more interesting and pathetic than the social department of such a peer as the Duke of Northumberland. Here is a solemn and dismal old man who is positively oppressed by a sense of his own magnificence. It haunts him like a shadow of black care. It is with him as he sits down to table; in company as, I doubt not, in solitude; in London as in Alnwick. The head of the house of Smithson must do something to show that he is not as other mortals are; or if he cannot do something, he must do nothing with a funereal parade of pompous vanity. I do not know whether it is inordinate water-gruel or an awful consciousness of his inexorable responsibilities which have given to his Grace of Northumberland an air of the profoundest melancholy. It is melancholy, indeed, of more or less melodramatic hauteur, but to a sympathetic spectator it is exceedingly painful to watch."

THE DIVIDED SKIRT IN LONDON.—From a small pamphlet entitled "Rational Dress," I learn that all women who do not abjure petticoats in favor of trousers are devoid of sense and refinement, and are dominated by the instincts of the savage. All these moral defects, as well as several physical ones, may be cured, according to the authoress, by the adoption of the divided skirts invented by Lady Harberton. Petticoats, it seems, have robbed woman of her "proper equilibrium and healthy tone of mind," and those who have adopted the so-called national dress, i. e., trousers, feel the benefit of the change in their "growing mental and physical activity." From certain rather mysterious phrases in the pamphlet I gather that the donning of the divided garment is but a preliminary step to the subjugation of man. That inferior creature may well tremble when he sees symptoms of growing activity in the shape of lace and bangle trimmed trousers. The note of revolt is struck in the dictum that it is "degrading for a woman to seek to make herself attractive." I was talking recently to a lady about those divided dresses. She told me that she had been shown one by her dressmaker, and that so far as she could make it out, it divided the legs from each other and yet had an undivided skirt over this "arrangement," so that it in reality amounted to trousers worn under a skirt.—London Truth.

ANXIOUS TO BE NEIGHBORLY.—He was a small boy, with dirt on his nose and a faded straw hat on his head, and feet unwashed. He walked boldly up the steps, pulled the bell, and when the lady came to the door he said:
"Say, can you lend me your telephone for a few minits?"

"Why, I can't," she gasped out.

"We'll bring it back in half an hour."

"But I can't lend it, child. You don't seem to know what a telephone is. Who are you?"

"We live around the corner—just moved in, and we want to be neighborly.
I tried to borrow your wheelbarrow and shovel, but your boy wouldn't lend 'em, and our hired girl has been over to borrow tea and sugar, but couldn't get any.
We kinder thought we might borrow your telephone or something, and ma would bring it back and get a chance to see your style and ask you to run right in with your old clothes on!"

One afternoon a stranger, observing a stream of people entering a church, approached a man of gloomy aspect, who was standing near the entrance and asked:
"Is this a funeral?" "Funeral, no;" was the sepulchral answer; "it's a wedding." "Excuse me," added the stranger, "but I thought from your serious looks that you might be a hired mourner."
"No," returned the man, with a wear-far-off look in his eyes, "I'm the son-in-law of the bride's mother."

A COMSTOCK BARBER'S CURIOUS ACCOUNT Books.—"No, sir," said a Comstock barber to a suspicious-looking transient customer who affably remarked as the lather was being laid on that he supposed there were a good many men who failed to pay their shaving scores. "No, sir, I used to give credit, but I never do now —in fact nobody ever asks for tick any more."

"How's that?"
"Well, you see," said the barber, trying the edge of the razor on his thumb nail, "I had a set of stiffis who used to ask me to chalk it down. I got tired of keeping books and I adopted a new system. When I shaved one of these stand-bys I put a nick in his nose with my razor and kept tally in that way.
They got so they didn't want to run a bill."

There was a tremor in the customer's voice as he asked from beneath the lather: "Do you object to being paid in advance?"

It was a superstition in the good old times that if one could secure a lottery ticket, the number of which had been selected by a madman it would infallibly prove a winning one. Once upon a time Madame de Pompadour secured the number of all the unsold tickets in Paris, and having inscribed each upon a piece of paper set forth for the asylum, where she desired the superintendent to lend her a lunatic. The superintendent obligingly complied, and the lunatic having been brought in, Madame, with her sweetest smile and most impressive pantomime, wooded him to make a selection from the contents of her reticule, which she held open to him. The lunatic stared, glared, frowned, smiled, and at last comprehending what was demanded of him, ambled up to the lady, selected a ticket with much deliberation and swallowed it.

Shortly after the Queen's recent depature from Balmoral, an inquisitive American newspaper correspondent in London asked Mr. Lowell, the American Minister, to get her a ticket to Her Majesty's private apartments at Windsor. "What for?" demanded he; "you don't mean to say that you would write a description of her upholstery?" The correspondent admitted that such was her intention, "because people were always interested in such things." "Well," said Mr. Lowell, "I would not write such things to please people. I would starve first. No, I will not get you a ticket to the Queen's private apartments. I do not believe in such things. Write about the things you see in the streets, write about anything or everything, but leave upholstery and furniture alone."

Not long since a smart, seven-year-old son of one of our preachers, after service was over and the family had returned home from church, said: "Papa, do you ever look at me while you are preaching?" The father, thinking that he was a little hurt by supposed neglect, said: "Certainly, my son. I often look at you and think of you when I am preaching."
"But to-day, did you notice me at all?"
"Yes, I did, son, several times," said the father. "Well, papa, did you see me wink at you two or three times?" "No, my son. What did you wink at me for when I was preaching?" "I winked at you, papa, to get you to stop; you were spinning it too long."

A Michigan farmer watched a three-card-monte game, as played by the camp follower of a circus, and soon saw, of course, that the card with the bent corner was never the picture one when a genuine bet was made on it. By a simple process of reasoning he concluded that by excluding the card which the dealer intended the victim should select, and choosing one of the two other instead, an even chance of winning could be obtained. He wagered $100 on this theory, and won. But he had to whip the gambler and the stool pigeon in order to get away with the money, as they fought hard against losing.

At a dinner-party, a clumsy footman spills the contents of a gravy-boat over the dress of one of the guests. "How clumsy! What a pity!" says the lady of the house; "how could you do such a thing? As likely as not there won't be enough sauce to go around now."

A lady engaging a page, explained to him that she wanted her servants to have plenty to eat, but she didn't like anything wasted. "Lor, no, ma'am," said the lad; "I've just such feelings myself. I'd eat till I bust, rather than have anything wasted."
