Cetewayo.

HIS MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.

The St. James' Gazette says that on his arrival in London Cetewayo received no visitors, but retired shortly after midnight. On the party reaching their bedrooms, however, it was found that the apartments, which had been arranged according to English notions of comfort, were unsuited to native requirements, and a rearranging reducing the sleeping accommodation to the level of the floor had to be made before the Zulu idea of comfort was realized. Cetewayo and his party were conveyed from Southampton in a special train, which proceeded at a rate which completely astonished Cetewayo and his companions.
They placed their fingers in their ears, and gazed stupidly if not with alarm.
The beauty of the country exceeded Cetewayo's expectations. "If," he said, "I could only live in a country like this, I should want for nothing more on earth." The cattle attracted attention, and he frequently expressed his surprise that after feeding on such soil our herds did not become so fat as to be unable to rise. Later, he exclaimed that we were like ants—we swarmed; and he added:
"Why ever did a nation so grand, a people so numerous, make a war upon a man so little as the Zulu? Why did you not ask me to run away—to get out of Zululand? That would have been noble of you and kind to me."

HIS VOYAGE FROM THE CAPE.

A correspondent who was on board the vessel with Cetewayo from Maderia to Plymouth, gives the following narrative of the voyage: Although the weather was fine during the journey from Cape Town to Maderia, Cetewayo and his attendants suffered for a short time from sea sickness. The first to board the Arad in Funchal Bay were the Portuguese customs officials. The chief official inspected His Majesty gravely and in silence. Cetewayo gazed at the official somewhat disdainfully and muttered something to Ungeongwana which drove him into a paroxysm of laughter, and this ran through the entire Zulu group.
Grapes, cigars, peaches and invitations to smoke and drink were among the peace offerings made to Cetewayo by the many visitors; but while the grapes and peaches were accepted by a bow or a smile, the cigars and liquor were declined. The accommodations assigned to the King and suite on board the Arab was sufficient, and in every sense admirable.
The ex-King, his cousin, and two councillors dined together in the saloon, and they occupied a table which at their own request was set apart exclusively for their use. The Zulus had peculiarities in their diet. At breakfast they began with their beefsteaks, and finished with porridge.
They have learned the use of the knife and fork, but they have not quite accustomed themselves to walking up stairs.

ETIQUETTE.

Cetewayo enjoyed strict observance of etiquette, a breach of which by his suite he would not suffer. During the run from Maderia he invariably entered first at meal times. The same rule was observed when the party left the table.
The ex-King chatted pleasantly to all and inquired after their bodily condition.
When Cetewayo declined to receive a visitor his pleasure was conveyed in the brief exclamation, "the King sleeps." Cetewayo occasionally attended divine service during the voyage. On one occasion he arose in the midst of the service and muttering "Let us go," walked from the saloon, followed, of course, by his faithful chiefs. The ex-King believes that his visit to England is merely preliminary to his restoration to Zululand.

A JEALOUS HUSBAND'S MISTAKE.—During the absence of Dr. H. B. Palmer from his residence in Chicago, his wife and Ephraim Admire, a student in the doctor's office, came to this city. Yesterday Palmer found them at a boarding house here and tried to shoot Admire.
A lively struggle ensued. Admire knocked Palmer down and held him until assistance came. Palmer was arrested, but was subsequently released.
He had Admire arrested on a charge of larceny, and then returning to the house he beat his wife shockingly, and would have killed her had not the police arrived.
She claims that Admire, who is several years her junior, accompanied her as a protector only. The boarding house people say the relations of the pair had been perfectly honorable, and no effort was made to deceive any one as to their relationship. Mrs. Palmer is in a dangerous condition.—Ottawa Press.

Who is Arabi Pasha.

Says the Chicago Times:—It has been discovered that Arabi Pasha is not an Arab but a Frenchman, who used to deal in confectionery in New Orleans, and subsequently fought in the Franco-Prussian war, after which he went to Egypt, and rapidly ingratiated himself with the people. It is a pretty story, and there is just enough improbability about it to make it take well. It is, however, a protean anecdote, which has appeared in so many shapes that there is some lack of confidence in it. Some years ago it was discovered that Sitting Bull was not an Indian, but a graduate of the National Military Academy, who had resigned from the army and adopted savagery. This story was told with great circumstantiality, the American name of the Sioux chief was given, and various witnesses were called upon to identify him, which they all did.
Five years ago Osman Pasha the "ghazi" had barely loomed up conspicuously at Plevna before he was at once thoroughly identified as a Yankee who had disappeared several years ago, gone to Turkey, and done as the Turks did until he had become just like one of them, except that he, of course, retained his American superiority over Turks and Russians and perhaps Italians. Now there are a few slight changes in that pretty romance, and it is made to fit the Egyptian lead.
The fiction is older than Sitting Bull.
During the Indian mutiny was reported in England that some of the sepoy leaders, who made the most determined resistance, were renegade English officers. The fact that a good many Europeans have adopted Mohammedanism and Turkish manners, and have risen to eminence in the Turkish military service, gives a certain air of probability to these stories. Omar Pasha, the Turkish general in the Crimean war, and Mehemet Ali Pasha, one of the most important generals in the late Russian war, were Europeans. But the stories grow for the most part out of a little love of mystery and a good deal of belief in the part of Europeans and Americans that Orientals are so far inferior that any one of their leaders who really distinguishes himself must belong to some of the western nations.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LEGISLATURE.—The Victoria (B. C.) Colonist says: The constituencies have done their duty. They have returned a majority of members to the House to oppose the Local Government. At the very best the Government can count but four members who were elected to support them. The names of the quartette are Messrs. Beaven, Helgesen, Hett and Galbraith. All the rest are Oppositionists or Independents—most of the latter possessing strong leadings towards the Opposition. Under these circumstances how can Mr. Beaven and his associates have the assurance to ask His Honour to longer accept their advice?
How ask him to sanction the continuance of a policy which there is every reason to believe the members will reverse at the earliest possible moment? How expect him to take their counsel at this supreme moment when the dry-dock languishes, the island railway trembles in the balance, and a horde of Chinese are preparing to rush in and colonize the public lands?
A writer in the Post of Tuesday, who said that Mr. Beaven had lowered himself in the eyes of his friends by the pertinacity with which he held on to his portfolio in the face of defeat, spoke with earnestness and truth. The Post, it appears, supported Mr. Beaven in the belief that he was "an honorable politician." The scales have now fallen from its eyes and it be-holds in him an officer who retains his grasp on the public purse in opposition to constitutional law and precedence for the sake of his salary—the mere lust of gain.
Mr. Beaven may not be aware of the fact, but the constitution stands in the way of the successful consummation of his plans, and places large powers in the hands of the Lieut.-Governor.

BUNSTER'S DEFEAT.—Referring to the result of the contest, Gordon 452, Bunster 292, the Victoria Colonist remarks:— The election of Mr. Gordon to the Commons in Vancouver district by a very large majority is assured. The district has every reason to rejoice at the change.
Mr. Gordon has already made his mark as a local legislator. He has always been distinguished for his independence of character, straightforward business habits and entire respectability. As a debater he is concise, clear, and effective. When in the Local Parliament he supported the Elliott Government; and when that Ministry succumbed before a storm of abuse and calumny, Mr Gordon went
