A Chinaman's Idyl.

"Must I really go, sweetheart?"
"Yes," replied Lillian McGuire, placing her shapely white hand in his, and looking into his face with a tender earnestness that showed the true womanliness of her nature; "it is better, far better for both of us, that we should part for ever; but as she spoke the hot tears of pain welled up into her beautiful brown eyes —those eyes that had witched with their bright glances and dreamy tenderness so many men—and with a little sob of pain Lillian's head was bowed upon George W. Simpson's shoulder in an ecstasy of grief.

"Couldn't you put a ten-year limit on your bill, darling?" asked the young man, bending over the little head that was pillowed so trustingly just under his left ear; "I certainly ought to have as good a chance as a Chinaman."

A low moan of pain and a convulsive shake of the little head was the only response.

But George was not to be denied so easily. "Can I have one hope?" he said, "one little nickle-plated 10-cent hope?"

Lillian lifted her head and looked at him steadily. "Perhaps," she said, in cold, Baffin's Bay tones, "you would drop if a house fell on you, but I begin to doubt it. Know then, since you will have it, that under no circumstances can I ever accept your proffered love, for I am a packer's daughter, and packers' daughters come high"—this with a very haughty expression that lower case type cannot convey.

George W. Simpson saw at once that this proud beauty had been making a plaything of his love. The revelation was a terrible one, but he bore it bravely.

"Very well," he said, in husky, haven't-ha-l-a-drink-in-two-hours tones. "You have stampt with the iron heel of scorn upon the tender violet of my budding love, but some day when your children—little winsome brats, with sunny smiles and an assortment of colic that will keep you up three nights every week—are climbing upon your knee until you are in danger of becoming knee sprung, you will perhaps remember, with a tinge of sadness in the recollection, how you tovel with the love of a loyal, trusting, Cook-County heart and threw forever over a young and happy life the black pall of a disappointed hope and crushed ambition. I have seen the roses of my love wither and waste away until they lie shrivelled and blighted by the dusty roadside of Life, and you can bet that I feel pretty rough about it. I have seen my beautiful and stately Ship of Hope, with its tall, shapely masts and towering wings of snowy canvas, that sailed away so buoyantly and bravely over the shimmering sea not many months ago, come back to me a shapeless wreck—the tapering spars that where so white and clean now jagged and broken, and to them clinging the dark seaweeds, while of the sails that rivalled the clouds in fleecy purity there remain only blackened shreds that flap dismally in the moaning wind, whose voice seems to sound the requiem and dirge of my dead and buried love. I have got the boss wreck, and don't you forget it."

Lillian looked at him steadily for a moment. "Do you mean these words you have spoken, George?" she asked.

"You can bet your life I do," he answered in low, passionate tones.

"And do you love me so dearly?"

"Well, I should gasp," was the reply, a pearly tear glistening in George's off eye.

"Then," said Lillian, twining her arms about his neck, "I will roost on your knee next Tuesday evening as usual.
Papa would never forgive me if I let a man who can talk like that go out of the family."

A lady who resides at Whitby, in England, boasts of a famous rose tree, of the description known as the Marechal Niel, which was planted eighteen years ago and now has an extreme growth horizontally of 48 feet to the left and 54 feet to the right of the parent stem. The average depth of the tree is 5 or 6 feet, and last year 2,500 roses were plucked from it and this season 3,500 distinct buds in formation have been counted already.
