The False Guardian.

Just after the close of the American Revolution James Taylor, a young ship carpenter, of Boston, sailed on board the Orient, a new and staunch built ship, bound for Smyrna, at that time the largest and wealthiest city of the Levant.
After the usual tedium and want of variety incidental to so long a voyage, the Orient arrived safely at that port and un-shipped her anchor.

The next morning, just as the captain's gir: was being lowered for the accommodation of that officer and the supercargo, who were then preparing to go on shore to report to the British Consul and pay their respects to Mr. Tracy, the American merchant, to whom they bore letters of introduction and credit from Gray, Tolbitts & Co., the great importing house at home, they perceived a small rowboat rapidly approaching the ship, and containing two persons—a man, who was vigorously rowing, and one solitary female figure.

When the boat came alongside, the boatman promptly assisted the lady on board. Somewhat wildly, but hesitatingly, she inquired for the captain, who, in company with the supercargo, was pointed out to her.

She was young and pretty, in fact almost childlike, and seemed, from her wild, scared look, to be laboring under some deep anxiety or fear. She was dressed in garments of the richest material, though seemingly thrown on in haste and with the greatest negligence.

She approached the captain, and in a flurried, nervous way, inquired if she might be allowed to speak with him a moment alone.

He answered in the affirmative, and drawing her aside out of hearing of his companion, patiently prepared to listen, for the sudden appearance of the strange young lady on board his ship at so early an hour in the morning had greatly excited his curiosity.

"Will you excuse me," she began timidly, "but are you a single or a married man?"

Captain Ward glanced at the questioner curiously. Indeed, it was a peculiar question for a young woman to ask of him, a perfect stranger. But he answered her with perfect good breeding and politeness. Yes, he was a married man.

The young lady looked disappointed, but presently recovered.

"Is there any gentleman on board your ship who is not married, and—whom you think would be willing to marry a rich girl within an hour, and ask no questions? I will say that she has been deeply wronged and persecuted, but is nevertheless highly respectable and virtuous, though she can only claim her property by clearly establishing the fact of a legal marriage."

"Both of my mates are married," said the captain, "and the supercargo is engaged to a young lady in Boston, to whom, I understand, he will be married on our return. But hold," he added reflectively, "there is our carpenter, James Tudor, a fine looking, gentlemanly young fellow as one might wish to see, and unmarried.
In fact he is more of a gentleman in his ways and manners than any of us, if we except Mr. Owley, yonder, the supercargo."

"Can I see him?" inquired the strange young lady, eagerly.

"Oh, certainly, Miss; I will summon him directly."

And James Tudor, the sprightly and handsome young carpenter, was sent for, who came promptly aft, where Captain Ward and his mysterious visitor were standing.

I was evident at a glance that Tudor had made, at first sight, a favorable impression upon the young lady.
Captain Ward therefore excused himself to the young lady, and leaving her alone with Tudor, rejoined Owley, when the two shortly after took their seats in the gig, and were pulled ashore by the four seamen in waiting.

At the awkward introduction of the captain, the carpenter touched his tarpaulin politely and made a low and graceful bow, which went far toward captivating the heart of the young lady.

"Dear sir," she said, blushing and trembling visibly; "I have what may appear a very unmaidenly proposal to make to you. There is a wealthy young lady, in whose service and interest I am now employed, who cannot obtain possession of her rights excepting by marriage, as a proviso to that effect was unfortunately embodied in her father's will.

"Her uncle was appointed her guardian, and taking advantage of the situation has since attempted to make traffic of her hand, by marrying her to a wretch whom she loathes, in consideration of his yielding up to him one-half of the property, which amounts, I am told, to over fifty thousand pounds sterling. It is now the dearest wish of this young lady to marry some one else and thus defeat her unprincipled guardian, who has been to her, since her father's death, a most unmerciful tyrant. She is pretty and amiable, and, I have every reason to believe, would devotedly love her husband. And now I come to the most difficult part of my mission? Will you, a stranger from a foreign shore, take pity on her hopeless condition, and marry her? The moment you are married she will make over to you her entire fortune.
