Hotel Beats.
One of the detectives furnished a Philadelphia Inquirer reporter yesterday with the details of several shrewd methods of swindling in vogue by hotel sharpers.

THE FOLLOWING TRICK, which was recently played on most of the prominent hoteliers throughout the country by a trio of professional skins, was exposed by the detective alluded to:
One traveled with a goodly-sized trunk of the finest and most fashionable character, and the other two had valises of different styles and evidently well filled.
All of these rogues wore good clothes, but neither their dress nor manners corresponded sufficiently to afford the "cutest" clerk a clew to the fact that they were in any way connected one with another. One with a valise would walk briskly up to the hotel desk and slamming his baggage down, register, be assigned a room, and order his baggage up stairs. It may be here necessary to state, explanatorily, that a "solid" looking "front," or, in more refined language, a gentlemanly or business-like appearance, is all that is requisite to secure a person with a valise a week's accommodation at a first-class hotel, those in charge, under such circumstances, "seldom requiring the, at common places, customary "pay in advance."

The man with a trunk would next put in an appearance and go through about the same formalities, and, lastly, would come the other man with a valise. The order of going, however, would be somewhat changed. The traveller with a trunk would promptly make his appearance at the end of the week and settle for his accommodation, state his intention of leaving, express entire satisfaction with the entertainment he had received, and his determination to patronize the place again when he came to town, say "good bye" to the clerk, shake hands pleasantly, and order the porters to bring his trunk down stairs in readiness to go to the depot, where he intended, or not, as the case might be, to take the train for some other city, the hotel men of which it has been decided to "play." The other two (his companions) would never show up at the desk at all, for their baggage went out safely and snugly packed within the safe receptacle of their companion. To the clerk it is a puzzle how the pair of rascals got off with their valises, as they were probably seen to go out empty-handed.

A remarkable and unique way of getting the best of hotel keepers developed itself with the coming into vogue of the long and clumsy ulster, and has since been played with success in different parts of the country. The trickster would commence operations in a house convenient to the place intended to be victimized by dressing himself in warm underclothing, clean shirt and collar of the finest fabric, and over these a huge ulster coming way down to his feet, which are incased in highly polished boots. A hat, cane, and satchel complete his outfit. In this scant and deceptive attire he would walk boldly up to the hotel desk and secure a good room, paying for it, and at the same time taking good care to display a large roll of bills, probably "stuffed" with green paper.

In the morning there was sure to be an unearthly pulling at the bell indicating his room, and the person answering it would find an apparently indignant gentleman in a fearful frenzy of excitement, who, between curses and ravings, tenders, by instalments, the startling statement that some one during the night had robbed him of clothing, money, and he "was in a pretty fix, to be sure." The sympathetic servant rushes forthwith to instruct the proprietor of what had occurred, and this worthy man, in fear that the matter will become known to the whole house, is very likely to compromise by furnishing his supposed unfortunate guest with a new suit of clothes and the amount of money claimed to have been stolen; at least the matter would probably be settled in some way profitable to the bold fraud, any way at all being, of course to his advantage.

An original genius, who eked out a precarious existence by his wits while stopping at a well known hotel in this city, went to a good deal of trouble to get a good pair of boots for nothing, besides beating his stopping place out of its just dues. He went to a first class shoe shop and ordered a pair of the very finest articles that could be made, being very exact in his stipulations as to the material and style, and ordered them to be sent to his room at a certain time. Then he gave the same order in another store, except that the delivery was to be made half an hour later. The boy who brought the first pair was sent back to have the left boot stretched, and the boy who carried the second pair was sent back with the right one. The swindler then put on the remnants, for which he had not paid, and caught the next outbound train.

HOTEL KEEPERS HAVE LOST CONSIDERABLE by cashing checks, and it is a pretty hard matter for any one who has a draft for which he wants the money value to get accommodated at a hotel now.

The following incident related by a hotel clerk is to the point: Formerly we did guests favors by cashing their checks and drafts, but we soon got bitten. A gentleman in the dry goods business stopped with us for several seasons and promptly settled for whatever he contracted for. This gave us implicit confidence in him. However, the last time he was with us he stopped but a few days.
He claimed to be doing plenty of business, and his sample trunk was with him as usual. One evening he came to the desk with an open letter in his hand and requested us to cash a draft of $100 for him.
He claimed to have just received it from his establishment, and being short of money and desiring to leave on the evening train, it was very necessary he should have it. His desire was granted, and with a portion of the money he paid his bill, departing with his usual pleasant "Good bye." A few days afterwards we ascertained that the draft had been forged, and that our former respected guest had some time past ceased to be an employee of the house he represented himself to be still connected with. It was not deemed advisable to follow him up with a detective or to have him arrested.
Nothing cuts a hotel man so deep as to be robbed out of clean cash.

THE "BOGUS ADVANCE AGENT" DODGE was a favorite one with beats who possessed the qualifications to represent themselves as showmen. This game was generally played in small towns, and was worked in this way: The "agent" after deceiving the country newspaper into making an announcement of his presence in the village, he would call on the hotel-keeper, get his best terms, make a contract for twenty-five people (himself included) for two days' board, probably three. This he would hand to the clerk to be presented at the box office promptly at a special hour on the evening the show was to open. Should it appear practicable the agent requested the landlord in an offhanded way, for $10, as he was a "trifle short," and he would make the order call for $10 more. Of course the show never came along as promised.
Most companies are now so well known that the "bogus advance agent racket" is of little avail.

The American's Motto.

The following story is related of an immensely wealthy American in Europe, who had made his fortune suddenly, has suddenly found out that it was the correct thing to have a coat-of-arms on his carriage. So he ordered one. The celebrated advertising heraldic stationer was a bit of a wag in his way, and took the old fellow's measure at a glance. "What you want is a crest and a motto, sir," said he politely.
"I guess so." He was requested to call next day and see the design, and accordingly went. The crest was a mailed arm holding a dagger—"something uncon-mon," the heraldry man said—and the motto, Semper nobilis omnibus benignus, which means, he explained, translating freely, "Always noble and kind to everybody." The old man was delighted.
"Now, the latest style of printing mottoes is initializing the words after the fashion of the old Roman motto, 'Senatus populus que Romanus,' which the ancients abbreviated into S. P. Q. R. Of course you'd like yours done in that way, sir?" "Most assuredly," replied the living gold mine, and he forthwith ordered reams of notepaper and envelopes to match, stamped instantly in gold and silver and every known hue. Well, he and his wife used the stationery a month or so, writing to everyone they could think of, when one morning while studying with more scrutiny than usual the beauty of the decoration it suddenly dawned upon him that the caption of the sheet to which he had been daily and hourly affixing his valuable signature was nothing more nor less than S. N. O. B.

"What harm has the lad done you?" asked an old gentleman, roughly collaring a boy who was warning the jacket of another urchin with a bit of wild grape vine.
"He ain't done me no harm." "What are you thumping him for then?" "Cause his father and mother never licks him, and I'm doin' it for charity."
