A Serious Case.

AN OLD WOMAN SUSPECTED OF HEINOUS CRIME.

Woodstock, Ont., Sept. 22.—In the Gore, immediately west of this town, resides an old colored woman named Munson, who boasts that she has reached the age of 110. Her appearance, and a son of sixteen living with her, stand testimony that she is not so old by perhaps three score of years. Her name has at various times been associated with mysterious occurrences at her house, and the impression, whether well-founded or not, has gone abroad that she had taken part in many a dark and dreadful crime. More than one mysterious death, it is said, has happened at her house, while it was notorious that disolute characters reported that they went to her to get rid of incumbrances.

THE LAST TRAGEDY

occurred at a small house owned by this woman, only a stone's throw from her own residence. It was occupied by a woman who gave her name as Ellen Winegardner, but who, it seems, was known by the name of Kemp or Camp, after the man who is said to have brought her from Tilsonburg to Munson's. She had with her a child three years of age. Two weeks ago she left Munson's house, where she had been living for several months, and began housekeeping in the place where she was found dead. The bed where she lay was in a dreadful condition. Cloths lying on the floor were found soaked with blood, and outside the door ashes concealed numerous clots of blood. The testimony of the physicians shows that death was the result of

INSTRUMENTAL VIOLENCE.

The child, which had reached the eight months' stage, was not born. The marks of the deadly instruments are unmistakable, and the wounds are sufficiently extensive to produce fatal results. Chief McKee and Coroner McLay instituted a thorough search of the residence of Mrs. Munson. They were astonished to find immense quantities of wearing apparel, mostly new, dresses and other articles by the dozen, as well as bed linen; four or five sets of instruments, such as would be used in cases of abortion, and which Mrs. Munson explained were used by her for opening abscesses, when people suffer in from such diseases applied to her for help; several books and papers treating on medical matters; a large number of letters from people in various parts of the United States and Canada, many of them asking advice about getting rid of their indiscretions; several phials of drugs, and some capsules of balsam copiba. Mrs. Munson appears to be wholly indifferent about the investigation. She claims that she visited the woman the night before she was found dead; she was then suffering from an attack of ague. She alleges that she was not aware that the deceased was in trouble.
