

THE WELCOME HOME

Both the Duke and King

Success

OF THE ROYAL TOUR IN THE COLONIES.

His Majesty's Happy Remarks
in Toasting His Son's Health.

London, Nov. 4.—The royal train arrived from Portsmouth at Victoria railroad station at 12.56 p. m. Saturday. Immense crowds of people gathered there to welcome the royal party.

All the way to Marlborough House the route was well lined and several parts were profusely decorated in colonial colors, while the Stars and Stripes and the Danish flag were also frequently seen. There were 4,000 troops on duty at Victoria station.

The colonial agents presented an address to the Duke of Cornwall and York, who replied in about the same terms as he used earlier in the day at Portsmouth, when he dilated on the enjoyment he had derived from his trip and his gladness at seeing his native land again after his deeply interesting journey, at every point of which he had been profoundly impressed by the universal declaration of loyalty to the throne.

The agents general of the colonies also presented an address to the king, who handed them a written reply as follows:

"I thank you for the loyal and dutiful address on the return of my beloved son and daughter-in-law from their visit to the portions of my realms of which you are the representatives. It was not without natural anxiety and hesitation that I sanctioned the departure of the heir apparent to my throne on a voyage which involved many months of separation. But it was my earnest desire to give effect to the wishes of my late revered mother and to the aspirations of my loyal subjects in the colonies, of whose devotion and patriotism I have received most signal proof in the splendid service they have rendered to the empire in South Africa, and I am fully repaid by the complete success which attended the visit and by the manifestations of devotion and loyalty which the presence of the duke and duchess everywhere evoked."

The members of the royal family and their suites rode in open carriages. The king wore a field marshal's uniform; the Duke of Cornwall and York wore the uniform of a rear-admiral, and Prince Edward of York was dressed in sailor's clothes.

London, Nov. 4.—At a dinner on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert last Friday evening, King Edward, toasting the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, gave a sketch of their tour. Referring to their arrival at Cape Town, his majesty said:

"There, unfortunately the war is still prolonged; but we firmly pray for the re-establishment of peace and prosperity."

In conclusion, the king said: "In all the colonies thus visited they fulfilled their mission, expressing the gratitude of the mother country for the aid generously accorded her in the hour of need, and they were everywhere received with a cordiality of loyal enthusiasm which could not have been surpassed. The accounts of these receptions have touched me deeply, and I trust the practical results will be to draw closer the strong ties of mutual affection which bind together the old motherland and her numerous thriving offsprings."

The Duke of Cornwall, in a felicitous response, testified to the "intense and enthusiastic loyalty shown by the people everywhere to the king and the throne," and also to "deep love of the mother country, which was everywhere spoken of as 'home.'"
