THE POLICE WARNED TO LOOK OUT FOR YANKEE FAKIRS.

Preparations for the big fair next week are going on very satisfactorily, and it is thought that everything will be in readiness for the opening by Monday night. The exhibition building and grounds today present a very animated appearance. A large crew of men are at work, under the direction of General Superintendent Hilyard, who expects to have the buildings all ready this evening for the reception of exhibits. Mr. Hilyard spends the greater part of his time on the grounds and is determined to have things in proper shape. He is ably seconded by Donald McCatherine, who also devotes his whole time to the good cause.

Secretary Murray and his assistants, J. D. Jago, J. A. Wisnawski and C. H. Allen, are hard at work in the office, which is located in the main building. The entries are pouring in from all quarters, but not too fast to be taken care of by the secretary and his staff.

Among those now at work fitting up attractive booths in the main building are: Michael Ryan, McFarlane, Neill Manufacturing Co, R. Chestnut & Son, Jas S. Neill, McMurray & Co, Fred B. Edgecombe, J. Bebbington & Son, H. F. Albright, the White Candy Co, George McFarlane, Thos H. Culter, H. C. Rutter, D. Fraser & Sons, and others. They are sparing no pains nor expense and the interior of the big building will present a most attractive appearance as a result of their efforts.

Electrician Stockford has about finished installing the plant which is to supply light for the grounds and outbuildings. He has placed eleven arc lights on the grounds, four in the carriage house, four in the root house, and two in the henery, making twenty-one in all. The electric light company have the contract for lighting the main building and show tent.

The exhibition grounds had a large number of visitors today, and all expressed surprise at the magnitude of the enterprise.

The city police have learned that a number of fakirs from Bangor and other points in Maine have decided to pay the city a visit during exhibition week. Should they arrive here and attempt any "funny business" they will be promptly taken care of.

THE DEAD PRESIDENT.

fantry regiment. His gradual, unswerving steps toward leadership were apparent even at that time, when he was only eighteen years old. He was made company sergeant and second lieutenant while nineteen; first lieutenant when twenty; captain when twenty-one; and on March 13, 1865, at the age of twenty-two, for gallantry in battle, he was brevetted Major of the United States Volunteers by President Lincoln. Before this he had served on the staff of Generals R. B. Hayes, George Cook and Winfield S. Hancock, and after the signal honor conferred by Lincoln he was detailed as acting assistant adjutant general of the First Division of the First Army Corps until mustered out, July 26, 1865. Thereafter he studied law in Mahoning County, Ohio, pursued a course in Albany (N. Y.) Law School, and was admitted to practice in Ohio in 1867, at once settling in Canton, which has been his home ever since. His first important political office was that of prosecuting attorney of Stark County, Ohio, which he filled in 1869; and he was elected to congress in 1876, where he served until 1891. As chairman of the committee on ways and means he reported the tariff bill in 1890, known as the "McKinley Bill," and during his congressional career he was especially recognized by the country at large as the leading advocate of a high protective tariff. He was defeated for congress at the November 1890 elections, his district having been changed by a democratic legislature; but in 1891, and again in 1893, he was elected governor of Ohio. Major McKinley was a well-known figure at national conventions of the republican party. In that of 1884 he supported James G. Blaine; in that of 1888 he supported John Sherman; in 1892 he was made chairman of the national convention, and received 182 votes for presidential nomination, but true to his former career, he refused to allow his name to go before the convention, believing the best interests of the country could be served by a renomination of Benjamin Harrison, whom he supported.

In 1896, however, he accepted the nomination as presidential candidate, at the St. Louis convention, receiving 661 votes out of a total of 905 votes, and in November, 1896, he was elected president by a popular plurality of 600,000 votes, and received 271 electoral votes, as against 176 for William J. Bryan.

In 1900 President McKinley was re-elected, receiving 692 electoral votes as against 155 cast for Colonel Bryan.

During President McKinley's first term ensued the war with Spain, which lasted from April 21, 1898, until April 11, 1899, although actual hostilities ceased on August 13, 1898. All his life had McKinley implicitly trusted the American people, and that they trusted him, was shown by their representatives in congress, who instantly passed an appropriation placing the enormous sum of $50,000,000 at the disposal of the president, also commander-in-chief of the American military and naval forces, upon his simple request; a response of patriotism and faith in the president that created amazement in European capitals.

President McKinley's career since his second election is of such recent occurrence as to need but little mention. Suffice it to say that never has the industrial condition of the country been so prosperous, never have "good times" been so nearly universal, never have material possessions been so widely enjoyed and distributed among the people of the United States, as during the years of stability now passing.

In his domestic relations Mr. McKinley has proved that in this country, at least, the most successful political career, extending over a lifetime, is no bar to maintaining a home of exalted ideals, where reign tranquility, affection, purity. It is the most remarkable that in this land of practically unbridled press and reckless speech, his bitterest enemies have never dared to whisper of dishonor in public affairs and private life. He leaves a wife but no children.
