

PASTOR ADAMS' DEPARTURE.

Much Regret by the People of Truro.

Truro Daily News:—Pastor H. F. Adams Mrs Adams and their two children, left Friday morning for Fredericton, where they will rest for a time, and Mr. Adams will rest and recuperate his somewhat worn-out body, and try and regain his usual good health. For the last two days he has been confined to his room, a matter he very much regretted, as he wished to run around and say "goodbye" to some of his many Truro friends.

Since Mr. Adams' arrival in Truro nearly ten years ago, he has been one of the busiest and most energetic clergymen. He is a man of marked ability, and a strong, logical and sympathetic preacher. He has allied himself on the side of every great moral movement, and has been a most outspoken champion of what he believed to be for the good of his congregation in the First Baptist church and for the people of our town generally. His departure from Truro will be regretted, and best wishes to himself, especially for complete restoration to health, and to his family, go out sincerely from their host of friends in this town.

Previous to leaving Truro Mr. Adams was presented by his friends with $200 in gold.

Flogging Was His Strong Point.

Some one suggested during the reign of Dr. Keate at Eton that Christianity was not so much cultivated in his establishment as the classics, and especially that the endeavor to be "pure in heart" was not sufficiently attended to. The doctor accordingly addressed his boys upon this point, "Be pure in heart, or (with sudden energy) I'll flog you!" As he once flogged a whole class of examinees for confirmation, thinking they had come up for punishment, there is no doubt that he meant to keep his word.

A Cromwell Cannon Shot.

A workman in the employ of Mr. W. J. Hardy, of Bank House, Crowland, Lincolnshire, picked up what appeared to be an ordinary weight belonging to some machinery, but when Mr. Hardy came to examine it he found it to be one of Oliver Cromwell's cannon-shots, hurled by him at the Abbey in 1666. It is 11 inches in circumference, and weighs seven pounds.

ENGLAND'S NEW LOOM.

Weaver Crossley's Invention Will Revolutionize the Industry, Perhaps—A Partial Description.

If all is realized that is promised on behalf of the patent for a new automatic weaving loom bought up by a British syndicate, then the cotton trade of Lancashire—or that part of it concerned with weaving—is on the eve of brighter and most important developments.

Only a few days ago the Secretary of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce referred to a patent of the kind perfected in the United States, but the patent purchased by this British syndicate, and already sought after by a number of employers, is claimed to be superior to any yet invented.

It is pointed out by Mr. Richard Marsden, consulting examiner to the City and Guilds of London Institute and editor of The Textile Mercury, that by its application the weaver who now attends to four looms can easily attend to eight, and that, on the assumption that he earns 5s per loom, he will now earn £2 per week for attending to the looms. Moreover, as each loom, by the obviating of stoppages, will produce 12½ per cent. more cloth, the eight looms will bring the weaver's earnings up to £2 5s, as against £1, although it will be clear that some of the increase will go to benefit the employer and the consumer.

"This patent," said Mr. Marsden the other day to a Daily Mail representative, "is the invention of a young Brunley weaver, named Bernard Crossley. It is capable of attachment, at a comparatively small cost, to existing single-box looms. There are 850,000 power looms in this country. Out of this number Crossley's invention will be capable of being applied to 600,000.

"Among the competitors for the favor of the trade the Crossley loom, in my estimation, stands first because of its adaptability to existing looms, the simplicity of its mechanism, the speed at which it can be run, and the rapidity with which it effects the shuttle changes.

"There is no commercial limit to the speed of the loom of that adjustment. Assuming that a loom is working at 200 picks per minute, which is a good average rate, this loom, without any pause in its action, changes the shuttle in one four-hundredth part of a minute—that is, half a revolution of the first shaft.

"It effects this change and at the same time entirely avoids the faults made in looms as ordinarily constructed—that is, making what are termed thick, and thin places in the cloth, either by putting too much or too little weft in.

"This loom, after a change of shuttle, itself resumes work in such a manner as to leave no vestige of the change having taken place, save, perhaps, a broken pick, which might extend half way across the shed. It thus makes a superior cloth to the existing ordinary loom."—London Mail.

It Is Different in the U. S.

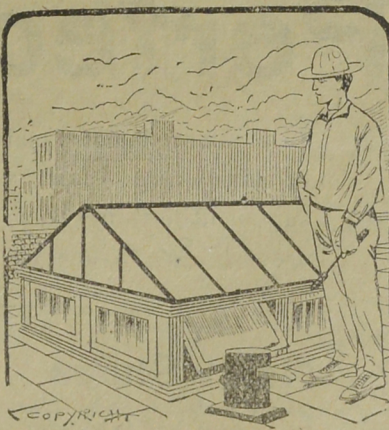

Glasgow or Birmingham can control its own railways as well as its other public utilities, because there they put thieves in jail, not in public office, says The New York Times. If the mayor of Glasgow were believed capable of using his official influence for the profit of himself or his friends he would never have an opportunity to repeat the crime. Here we promote our thieves from one high station to another, with full knowledge of their dishonesty, and the only check we can impose for our own protection is to limit their opportunities to loot.
