

THE COLLEGIAN.

BY SHELDON.

"No, I'm going over the hill," replied Edward briefly. He usually went straight down Main street, but a perverse spirit within him made him dislike the thought of Wheaton's company. "All right," replied Wheaton.

"Are you sick, Blake?" asked Wheaton, good naturedly. "I'd go rather slow if I were you. It's pretty hot this afternoon."

Edward made no reply, and Wheaton went away. When Edward came out of the cooler recesses of the hall down stairs, it seemed as if the heat was overpowering him. Still, with the dogged obstinacy that belonged to him, he went down town by the hill road because he said he was going to, although it was nearly a third farther.

When he reached the office, he could hardly stand up. Everything on the streets danced before him. He staggered along with his papers, half blind. How he ever made the rounds with his load he could not have told. Neither did he remember how he climbed the hill again and reeled into his room. He had a dim recollection afterward of dropping on his bed all in a heap, and then darkness fell on him.

When he came to himself again, some one was in the room, sitting by the bed and fanning him. It was very late in the afternoon, and he had a dim notion that perhaps it was another day.

He made a motion as if to rise, and the person sitting by the bed gently prevented him. He was faintly surprised to find how little strength he had.

"I must get up and carry my papers," he managed to say.

"That's all right, Blake. Don't worry about your papers. They're being carried all right."

Edward recognized Wheaton's voice and dimly saw him. Then his mind wandered off in a feverish delirium, and he lost all recollection of his surroundings.

When he came to himself again, a woman was sitting by the side of the bed fanning away the flies. It was afternoon again and very hot.

"Mother, is that you?" Edward whispered.

"Yes, Ned, dear boy," replied his mother, and she leaned over him and kissed his cheek. As she did so a tear fell on his face.

"How long have I been sick, mother?"

"Nearly five weeks, Ned. But don't talk. You are getting better, thank God!"

Then he lay still and gazed vaguely at his mother, a host of questions in his mind, but he was too weak to ask them and soon dozed off again.

When he was at last able to sit up in bed and talked a little he learned his mother the history of nearly two months. Parts of it affected him a good deal.

"Mr. Wheaton has been like a son to me," Mrs. Blake said when Edward was able to hear. "He sent for me as soon as the doctor declared your case dangerous. You have had typhoid, Ned, and have been very sick. At one time we feared."

"Was it so bad as that?"

"It certainly was. I don't know what I should have done if Mr. Wheaton hadn't."

"Has Wheaton been carrying my papers?"

"Yes. He said your route was convenient for him to handle, and he has been doing that and his own too. He has collected every Monday and given me the money each week. And, besides that, Ned, he has sat here with you for forenoon and insisted on relieving me a good many nights. He's a splendid fellow."

THE FARMER WORKS HARD

For a living. He has to. He must "make hay while the sun shines," no matter how he feels. The result is overwork. The stomach usually gives the first sign of strain. The organs of digestion and nutrition are deranged. Food does not nourish. Indigestion appears. In such a case Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery re-establishes the health by a complete cure of the diseased organs of digestion and nutrition. It cleanses the stomach, purifies the blood and removes the causes of disease. It is a temperance medicine, and contains no whisky nor alcohol.

"I was troubled with indigestion for about two years," writes Wm. Bowker, Esq., of Juliette, LaSalle Co., Ill. "I tried all the remedies but to no avail, until I wrote to Dr. Pierce and he told me what to do. I suffered with a pain in my stomach and left side and thought it would kill me. I am glad to write and let you know that I am all right. I can do my work now without pain and I don't have that tired feeling that I used to have. Five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and two vials of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cured me. Sick people can consult Dr. Pierce by letter free. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y."

Christianity. But, when I was young to take you have won such a college friend, said Mrs. Blake innocently.

Edward did some hard thinking. His dislike for Wheaton had been caused by two things mainly. One was Wheaton's habit of going around with a Bible under his arm and talking religion so much; the other was his poor scholarship, which seemed to Edward inexcusable. And yet, he now asked himself, is it any worse to carry a Bible around under one's arm than to put cigarette smoke into people's faces, as half the smart boys in Hope were in the habit of doing? And when it came to scholarship, was Wheaton to blame if his mental ability was of a second rate order?

"Mr. Wheaton told me," continued Mrs. Blake timidly, "that he has been praying for your recovery and hopes you will become a professing Christian."

Edward felt uneasy. He wished that his mother had not said anything about that. Of course, he said to himself, he felt grateful to Wheaton for the way he had acted. It had been an unselfish, noble thing for him to do. But he disliked Wheaton's praying over him and talking about his Christian life. And yet why not, Edward Blake, moral stickler for truth and righteousness? Is it so common a thing that one man should have an earnest solicitude for another man's eternal welfare that it can be carelessly or even impatiently treated, as you seem to treat this feeling of another soul for your soul?

There was a long silence in the room. Mrs. Blake did not know anything about Edward's thoughts or experiences along the line of a personal Christian life. He had never written anything about it, and the two had seldom talked about it. Edward had always avoided the matter.

"How are the folks at home?" Edward asked as Mrs. Blake rose to arrange some medicine.

"They are all well. Freeda has managed matters beautifully in my absence. She went to come on here and help, but it was not necessary. Miss Seton has spent a part of the summer on the farm, and Freeda has enjoyed her company. She has taken and helped Freeda and Aunt Sarah wonderfully. You would think she was born on a farm instead of in a city. Freeda wrote several letters to read when you were able. I was to give them to you one at a time, one a day, as you grew stronger."

"Give me one of them now, mother."

"I don't know. You have talked a good deal. Aren't you tired?"

Edward protested that he was not, and his mother let him have the first letter. During that week he enjoyed reading the letters one a day. They were written in Freeda's brightest style and gave accounts of the happenings on the farm. In several of the letters she joined with Freeda in hoping that Edward would speedily recover and sent her regards to him.

It was during the week of his recovery that Edward had a little interview with Wheaton which was not altogether satisfactory to either of them.

When he came in one forenoon, and Mrs. Blake went into the little bedroom to lie down awhile.

"I'm awfully thankful to you, Wheaton, for your kindness during my sickness, about the paper route and all that. Mother has told me. I won't forget it."

Wheaton looked somewhat haggard; but he was naturally thin and somewhat consumptive in general appearance.

"That's all right, Blake. I was right here and haven't had much to do this summer. You would have done the same for me."

"Do you think so?"

"Of course I do. Why not?" asked Wheaton, who was not one of the thin skinned students and complacently took any quantity of snubbing and scorn from the smart set in college.

When he was at last able to sit up in bed and talked a little he learned his mother the history of nearly two months. Parts of it affected him a good deal.

"Mr. Wheaton has been like a son to me," Mrs. Blake said when Edward was able to hear. "He sent for me as soon as the doctor declared your case dangerous. You have had typhoid, Ned, and have been very sick. At one time we feared."

first man who attempts to stop us. We do not want to see any bloodshed in our community, but the saloons must go.

"The first saloon man who strikes any of our members will be strung up to the nearest tree. We will stand no foolishness."

This ultimatum was posted all over town. All members of the Law and Order League have been instructed to report at noon armed with hatchets, guns and ropes. Rev. John Henderson, whose church was wrecked, will hold a prayer meeting early tomorrow and later will lead the march on the saloons.

Hundreds of farmers from all over Cowlitz County are arriving in Winfield to assist the townspeople in smashing the saloons.

Charles Schmidt, owner of two saloons, said: "We have stored our goods and we will not move them out of town. The first person who comes to our homes and attempts to raid them will be killed."

COUGHS, HEADACHE, CATARRH

Relieved in 10 Minutes by Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder.

Rev. W. H. Main, pastor of the Baptist Emanuel Church, Buffalo, gives strong testimony for and is a firm believer in Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. He has tried many kinds of remedies without avail. "After using Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder, I was benefited at once," are his words. It is a wonderful remedy and will relieve any form of head pain in ten minutes and eradicate catarrh.

NOTICE.

An application will be made at the next sitting of the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly for the incorporation of a Railway Company to be known as the John Valley Railway Company, with power to build a line of railway from the City of Saint John, New Brunswick, to the City of Fredericton, New Brunswick, via the City of Miramichi, New Brunswick, and the City of Grand Falls, New Brunswick, and to connect with the existing railway lines at each of the above places.

Americans in England.

Whatever may be the points of contrast between us, there is no doubt that Americans in ever increasing numbers are settling in England. It is remarkable how many have made permanent homes in London. They like to live there.

When an American has made a fortune, he finds it almost impossible to live quietly in his own country. There is something in the very atmosphere of the United States that makes people wish to burn the candle at both ends. Over here they may subside the incandescence to the very verge of the incandescence. But chief among the attractions that this country has for Americans is that they can escape the newspapers. Here wealthy persons can spend their money as freely as they wish, and they still remain private persons.

These are some of the reasons why the American colony in the British metropolis grows every year. But there is one more reason. Americans love to come here. The writer has talked to very many Americans, and almost all of them admit that in coming to England they are coming to a place for which they have a great respect and love, where they expect to find everything finished and orderly and quiet.—London Telegraph.

Too Refined.

"No," said Farmer Meddewgrass, "that Boston fellow that comes here to run the paper doesn't seem to get along very well. One fellow who much for style, an when he referred to a skin game as 'an epidermal pastime' they thought he was becoming a little too highfalutin."—Baltimore American.

A Blessing.

"You don't?" retorted the gentleman of similar characteristics. "Why, look here, I raised so many different kinds of new weeds from the last batch of government seeds that enough college professors come to the place to study even last summer to pay for a new barn."—Indianapolis Press.

Business Men's Backache.

When a man gets interested in his business he's apt to forget about himself.

When backache comes—when he feels depressed and out of sorts, he contents himself with the plea that he's worked too hard—he'll ease up some of these days.

But he doesn't let up—backache gets worse and worse—kidneys can't stand the strain put upon them—they need help—must have it if serious kidney trouble is to be averted.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

have helped hundreds of business men to do their work and keep their health by clearing their kidneys. Read the evidence:

"I have had kidney and urinary trouble for some time past, with distressing pain in the small of my back, and indeed felt very miserable. I got one box of Doan's Kidney Pills from Mason's drug store, and they cured me completely. I recommend them heartily as a splendid remedy for kidney or urinary difficulties, and as a cure for pain in the back they are certainly infallible."
