

Government Institutions Endorse Japanese Catarrh Cure as the Only Permanent Cure for Catarrh.

CURED EVERY CASE WHERE THE REMEDY WAS TRIED.

Catarrh is one of the diseases which should not be experimented with, every day's neglect allows it to spread deeper and deeper until loss of taste, smell and hearing are the inevitable result, then finally consumption sets in, for which there is no cure. Thousands who have suffered for years from catarrh proclaim Japanese Catarrh Cure the only permanent cure. It will cure you.

Mr. A. E. Wilson, Principal, Government Indian Home, Elkhorn, Manitoba, writes:—"Some time ago we purchased three boxes of Japanese Catarrh Cure, and must say it gave wonderful results in every case tried. It certainly is an article of unequalled merit."

Japanese Catarrh Cure is not a powder, it is a pleasant, healing, penetrating, volatile pomade, it is easy to use, requires no instrument of any kind, it reaches every catarrhal diseased portion of the mucous membrane, and permanently cures catarrh, wherever located. Sample box free. Enclose 5 cent stamp. Address, 140 Griffiths & Macpherson Co., Limited, 121 Church St., Toronto. Sold by all druggists, 50 cents.

FIRST BOOK PRINTED

MEXICO CLAIMS THE HONOR FOR THE AMERICAN CONTINENT.

The Success and the Disasters That Attended the Establishment of Printing Throughout the Vast Extent of This Country.

The first printing press on the American continent was set up in the City of Mexico in the sixteenth century. So much is known regarding the commencement of the art preservative in the western world, but when details are looked for different accounts and conflicting statements are found. One author claims that the first Spanish viceroy of Mexico, Antonio de Mendoza, who went to that country in 1535 and who was distinguished for his devotion to literature, established a printing house some years before 1531, and that the printer employed by him, whose name was Joannes Paulus Brissensis of Lombardus, a native of Brescia, Italy, was the first man to handle type in America. For a time one of his books, a folio volume executed in 1540, was cited as the first book printed on this continent. Another and perhaps more correct version is that printing was first established in Mexico by the Spanish missionaries, and the fact seems to be established that under their auspices a book, one mutilated copy of which is still in existence in a private library in Madrid, was printed in 1540 by Julian Cromberger, who died about 1544 and who was in all probability the first printer in America.

It is quite certain that the printing press was actively employed in Mexico in less than a century after the new art became generally known in Europe and for nearly a century before a printing press was introduced into the present limits of the United States. The second American city in which a printing office was established was Lima, Peru, where a work designed to assist the priests in the study of the language of the natives appeared in 1586.

At Cambridge, Mass., as Isaiah Thomas asserts, in January, 1639, printing was first performed in that part of North America which extends from the gulf of Mexico to the frozen ocean.

The beginning of the work of this first printing office in our country was a sorrowful one. Rev. Jesse Glover, through whose exertions the press had been secured and who contributed largely to the purchase, died upon his voyage to the new world, and his sons had afterward to sue their stepfather for the possession of the press. This primitive establishment was subject to the authority of Cambridge college, the president of which was censor of the press and responsible for all publications until special licensees were appointed by law in 1652, the press never being enfranchised in Massachusetts until as late as 1755.

One Green became the second printer in the United States. Three hundred acres of land were granted him in 1653, but Mr. Green, it would appear, could not find a suitable location for his grant until 1667, when it is recorded that 300 acres of land were laid out to Ensign Samuel Green of Cambridge, printer, in the wilderness on the north of Merrimac river.

In 1659 an Indian boy taught at the charity school of Cambridge to read and write English was apprenticed to Samuel Green and took upon himself subsequently the name of James the Printer, or James Printer. He printed Eliot's Indian Bible, the first copy of the sacred Testament made in this country. He rendered such efficient service on this work that Eliot said he "had but one man, namely, the Indian printer, that was able to compose the sheets and correct the press with understanding." A copy of the Indian Bible is to be seen in the National museum.

The negro appears first in an American printing office under the direction of one Thomas Fleet, who fled to this country for refuge from the rage of an insensate London mob. In Boston he established a printing house with the sign of the Heart and Crown, and here his sons succeeded him in the business, although with the advent of antiracial feeling the sign was changed to the Heart and Bible. Fleet owned several negroes, one of whom he taught not only to work the press, but to set type as well. He found special profit in printing small books for children and popular ballads, and such publications were rendered more attractive by the wood engravings cut for them by the negro artist. Caesar and Pompey, sons of this negro, also became printers and remained in the office or their master's sons.

The first firmly established newspaper in North America appeared in 1704, but full 14 years previous to this date one number of a newspaper had been published in Boston, which was instantly suppressed by the authorities. To the publisher, Richard Harris, this appears to have been no novel experience, for he had in his native land been fined for selling a Protestant petition during King Charles' reign and had also come to grief through printing a book with the revolutionary title of "English Liberties." Besides, he was once set in the pillory, on which occasion his wife is recorded to have stood by him to defend him against the attentions of the mob.

Boston was early distinguished as the home of letters. James Franklin, an older brother of Benjamin, established in 1721 a periodical which he made the organ of a company of literary gentlemen whose common characteristic seems to have been total disagreement with each other. The object of the journal was ultra revolutionary in tendency, being generally to show the world the events of the day by assailing all established beliefs and conventional manners and customs. Attacks were leveled indiscriminately at the British government, the preachers and finally inoculation. The aged Puritan minister, Increase Mather, protested publicly against the iniquity of the vile Courant and warned its subscribers against being "partakers in other men's sins." James Franklin was put in jail for a month and forbidden to print or publish the Courant or any pamphlet or paper of the like nature except it be first supervised, and he was finally obliged to leave Boston, like his brother Benjamin, and journey to a more liberal minded community.

Its Changed Appearance.

"My, the house looks changed some way!" said the lady who had moved out a month or two before and returned to make a call and see what kind of furniture the new tenants had.

"Yes," her hostess replied: "we've cleaned it up."

Engagement Confidences.

"You trust me thoroughly, don't you, Ethel?"

"Of course, Edgar; but, tell me, are the installments on this diamond ring all paid off?"
