THE COLLEGIAN.

BY SHELDON.

There was a habit among the girls in Hope college that winter of saying smart things about one another and a fashion for epigrammatic flings at the teachers and things in general that was not commendable. A few girls, like Freeda, never indulged in the habit. "It is not wit; it is a kind of whiplash talk that stings afterward," she would say. And yet even Edward, who was the poorest kind of talker himself, found himself attempting the same style of repartee whenever he met Freeda's roommate. She answered him, but, more than that, interested him in her. She had a serious side to her character that appealed to him. She had a shelf next to his in the laboratory, being one of the few girls taking a full course in chemistry, and very often during their experiments on test problems Edward would find occasion to help her. He was an expert in laboratory work, having kept up his practice through the preceding summer. He was planning to be a doctor, and Miss Seton more than once declared her intention to study for the degree of M. D.

"I don't want to teach or go into music or any of those things," she used to say. "I want a profession that calls for nerve and has some discoveries possible in it."

Edward Blake did not reason very profoundly over the facts, as they became more and more facts, while the term drew to its close and commencement was near. But that is not saying that he did not know what the facts were. And it is true of him that, being of the character he was, he was disturbed more deeply than he cared to confess. For the first time in his life he experienced a feeling that threatened to interrupt his other ambitions. He had always sneered quietly, all to himself, at the few men in college who had danced attendance on the girls in such a way as to be noticeable. He began to realize that he was drifting along into, if not the same category, a position where he had never been before.

He was sitting at his table one evening thinking of the whole matter, with his books open around him and his mind restless over the fact of his increasing thought of another person who had silently grown thus to demand a place there, when he was startled by a knock at the door. He had not heard any one come up stairs, and he had been so occupied that he had not expected or been prepared for an interruption.

He went to the door and saw President Royce standing there with a lady.

"Blake, this is Mrs. Preston, Willis' mother," said the president as they came in.

Edward greeted the visitor warmly. Mrs. Preston's face was serious as she returned the greeting. As she sat down Edward knew from her manner that she had some news of Willis that must be of grave importance. He waited for it with genuine interest, his own affairs for the time being forgotten at the sight of this sad faced woman, whose history was only partly known to him.

CHAPTER IX.

"I am on my way to San Francisco to see Willis," Mrs. Preston began, looking at Edward earnestly, "and I could not resist the inclination to come to Raynor on the way and see you."

"On your way to see Willis!" Edward exclaimed in great surprise. "Why, I did not know he had come home."

"He was badly wounded in an engagement shortly after that one of which he wrote you. He may lose an arm. He is to be sent home on one of the hospital transports that is expected in San Francisco in about two weeks. The time of its arrival is uncertain. I am going on, so as to be with him as soon as he arrives."

Mrs. Preston looked earnestly at Edward, who returned her look gravely. Her face bore marks of severe suffering.

"When he wrote last, he confessed that he was sick of the campaign and would be glad to come back to Hope college again. That is partly what I came to see you for. I want you to continue to room with Willis. He said in his letter that he didn't think you would care to. It will relieve me of a great source of anxiety to know that you are together."

"I am sure I am willing to do what I can to serve you, Mrs. Preston," Edward said, in a low voice. He was troubled a little at the possibility of Willis' coming back, partly on Freeda's account and partly on his own.

"You will promise me to do all in your power to help Willis, won't you?" Mrs. Preston asked anxiously.

"Yes, madam, I"— Edward hesitated a little. "I am afraid you exaggerate my influence over him. I do not have much in some directions."

"I am sure you are more of a help to him than you realize." Mrs. Preston replied eagerly. "Willis thinks everything of you and thinks you are nearly perfect."

"Of course I will do all I can," replied Edward, looking at the president and remembering what had been said in the little talk about the Christian life compared with morality.

"I feel quite sure, Mrs. Preston," said the president cordially, "that Mr Blake will help your son in every way possible."

Mrs. Preston looked and spoke her thanks, and in answer to several questions from Edward she described as well as she could the facts concerning Willis as they had been forwarded to her by the regiment.

"I don't think that even the loss of his arm will prevent his coming back here next fall. For one thing I am glad. I rejoice that he has had enough even of the fun and glory of war. Evidently his wound has sickened him of it."

Mrs. Preston remained a little longer and then rose to go. She wanted to call upon two of Willis' society friends to whom he had sent messages, and, as they roomed on the floor above, the president went up and introduced her to them and then came down to Edward's room again. Edward was surprised when he heard him say that there was a matter he would like to talk over with him.

He sat down a little way from Blake and looked at him earnestly, yet with a slight movement of uncertainty at first that was new to Edward. When it passed away, the president faced him with the strong, open look that was so characteristic of him. The first thing he said revealed to Edward the fact that the president more than guessed at the trouble he was having over the feeling he was beginning to experience for Miss Seton.

"Blake, I want to question you frankly about your studies. For the last two months I have noted a very serious falling off in your efforts. What is the matter? Are you working too hard at other things? What are you doing in addition to your paper route?"

Edward told him in a low voice and with an embarrassment that was so evident that even a stranger would have seen it.

"What are your plans for the summer?" the president asked abruptly. Edward was surprised.

"I haven't made any yet. I suppose I shall do as I did last year—remain here and carry my paper and do anything else I can get to add to my income."

The president was silent a moment, still looking at Edward keenly.

"It's a disappointment to me, Blake, that you have dropped down in your studies. You don't seem to be interested in them as you used to be. Tell me, my boy, honestly now, are you keeping something back from me that I have any right to know? I'm not a priest, and I'm not asking you to sit in confessional"—the president said it with a smile that made Edward feel easier—"but I am genuinely interested in your welfare, and I want to help you if you are in need, as perhaps you are, of a little wholesome, kindly counsel. Of course you needn't confide in me unless you want to, and then you won't do it anyway. I am 20 years older than you and have seen a little more of the world than you have. Are you willing that I should ask a few questions? I think I know about your present trouble, and I cannot help feeling that it is a part of my business to help you."

"No, sir; I don't mind if you ask the questions," replied Edward, feeling a little startled at the president's last sentence and at the same time experiencing a feeling almost of relief at what was coming.

"How old are you, Blake?"

"I'll be 21 next August."

"What are you planning to do in the world?"

"Well, sir, I have always thought I would be a doctor. My mother's father was a doctor, and mother has often expressed a wish that I go into the same profession."

"It's a noble profession. You are taking special chemistry this year with that in view?"

"Yes, sir."

"You have two more years in Hope college and then a three years' medical course?"

"Yes, sir, if I can go right on. I may have to do something one year to make my way."

"Of course you are figuring on an this in case you don't lose your health or break down or in case your mother does not need you on the farm?"

"Yes, sir; I've thought of that some" replied Edward, beginning to wonder some at the president's questions and still expecting something different.

"You've been ambitious to get on in your studies here, which are preparatory to your life work, haven't you?"

"Yes, sir; I've tried to do my best."

"But lately, my boy, you don't seem so interested. Aren't you well?"

"Yes, sir; I'm well enough," said Edward, in a low voice, anticipating the next question.

"Tell me now, Blake, frankly, are you beginning to think a good deal of one of the young ladies, a good deal more than you ever did before? Is that what's the trouble with you?"

"Would you call it 'trouble,' sir?" asked Edward, with an unexpected gleam of humor that surprised the president at first. But Edward was really relieved that at last the subject had been broached.

"That depends," replied the president gravely. "I do not know, of course, how far your feelings have gone. A feeling so strong as to render you unfit for the business that brings you to college would be trouble, would it not?"

"Yes, sir; I suppose it would," Edward answered again in a very low voice. There was not another man on earth that he would have confided in with such a matter except President Royce, and even with him it was embarrassing work.

"Are you willing to tell me, Blake, if your feelings—let us call it 'love'—for this girl are clear to you? Do you understand them?"

"I never was in love with anybody before," Edward answered slowly, and the president almost smiled at the way he said it.

Everybody's proud of this sort of Grandpa, and he's proud of himself; proud of his clear brain and active body. There are other kinds of grandparents that we can't be proud of. Weak of body and feeble of mind, we can only pity them. They no more live; they only exist. What makes the difference between these two classes of old men? A sound stomach and a plentiful supply of pure, rich blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, and increases the activity of the blood-making glands. It won't make old men young, but it will enable old men to assimilate the food they eat, and so strengthen them for a life of reasonable exertion.

"I suffered for six years with constipation and indigestion, during which time I employed several physicians, but they could not reach my case," writes Mr. G. Popplewell, of Eureka Springs, Carroll Co. Ark. "I felt that there was no help for me; could not retain food on my stomach; had vertigo and would fall helpless to the floor. Two years ago I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and little 'Pellets,' and improved from the start. After taking twelve bottles of the 'Discovery' I was able to do light work, and have been improving ever since. I am now in good health for one of my age—60 years. I owe it all to Dr. Pierce's medicines."

Old people often need a laxative medicine. The best for them is Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

ORDERED A PRIVATE CAR.

Former Freight Brakeman on the Southern Pacific Become a Millionaire by a Lucky Strike of Oil.

San Francisco, Feb. 20.—Oil strikes in California are making poor men millionaires as in the old days in Pennsylvania One of the strangest of these freaks of fortune came to John A Bunting, a former freight brakeman on the Southern Pacific road, who has just ordered a $30,000 private car.

Ten years ago Bunting was keeper of a railroad water tank on the desert near Tucson, Ari. Then he was advanced and finally became a freight brakeman. He loaned a friend $170 and took as collateral a watch and a mortgage on 40 acres of land in Kern county.

The friend did not pay, so Bunting sold the watch and foreclosed the mortgage on the land. He tried to sell the land, but could not get anything for it. Recently oil was struck near his place. He resigned and began to develop his property. He struck oil, and now is rated as a millionaire.

Bunting came into the office of general manager Fillmore on Saturday and sent in his card. Fillmore sent back a reply that he was sorry, but he had no job. Bunting sent back word that he was not looking for jobs, but wanted to buy a private car.

Fillmore congratulated him, and advised him to order a car with all the latest improvements, which would cost him $30,000, and meanwhile to rent a car from the Southern Pacific. This he did.

Bunting has no expensive tastes except a strong desire to travel in his own car and to have the car as luxurious as it is possible to make it.

PROFITABLE TIME FOR JEWELLERS

Peers and Peeresses Forced to Order Tiaras for the Court Ceremonies.

New York, Feb. 20.—The London correspondent of the Herald writes as follows: Wonderful is the calm succeeding the late series of processions.

Tradespeople are gloating over and counting up their gains. Jewellers are particularly jubilant, for quite half the peeresses had to provide themselves with tiaras, and this just at a time when diamonds had gone up thirty-five per cent.

Coronets have apparently gone out of fashion, yet a Bond Street jeweller tells a curious tale of how a nobleman entered his shop and said, "I wish to be measured for a gold coronet."

On the given day the jeweller went to the family mansion with the coronet, and found the noble lord lying abed consuming champagne and oysters. The shells of the latter he was hurling at two or three boon companions.

"Ha!" he exclaimed, "here comes my new nightcap."

He tried it on, said it fitted like a billy-cock, and signed his cheque with a signature which was undecipherable, but which was duly honored by the bank.

I asked if the business had been profitable, and the jeweller said: — "Very. The only drawback was that I got a bad cut on my forehead from an oyster shell.'

EXTENSION OF WHIPPING LAW.

Delaware Legislature Provides Punishment for Men who Ill-Treat Their Wives.

Wilmington, Del., Feb 20.—Shortly before the Delaware Legislature convened the Society of Friends of this city started an agitation for the abolition of the whipping post and pillory as means of punishment in this state. The agitation has resulted in extending this punishment instead of abolishing it. Today the House passed a bill providing that a man who ill-treats his wife shall be whipped with not less than thirty lashes. The Senate has already passed the bill, and Gov. John Hunn says he will sign it "a-flyin," as he heartily approves the measure

There was some debate over the bill. Mr. Ewing wanted provision made for punishing women who ill-treated their husbands. Mr. Clark opposed the bill, because he thought it would prevent wives from appealing to the law, as the lash would disgrace the wife and children. Mr. Ralph said he opposed the bill because the punishment was not severe enough. The injured wife ought to lay on the lash, he said.

The bill went through by a vote of 20 to 12. An effort to have whippings conducted in private has been defeated, and the bill to abolish the pilory for burglary has been reported unfavorably. The Wilmington Police Department strongly favors the pillory and lash. The Legislature has also added to the list of capital crimes by making kidnapping punishable with hanging.

Of all table beverages UNION BLEND TEA is the favorite as the carnation is the favorite among flowers. $400 in cash will be distributed among consumers in December.

NOTICE.

An application will be made at the next sitting of the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly for the incorporation of a Railway Company to be called The St. John Valley Railway Company, with power to build a line of railway from the City of Saint John, or from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Westfield, to Fredericton, following the valley of the St. John River as nearly as may be reasonably practible, also from the northerly terminus of the railway which the Woodstock and Centreville Railway Company is authorized by its charter to construct to St Leonards, in the County of Victoria, to connect with the Restigouche and Western Railway, and also with power to build from St. Leonards to Edmundston, and with authority to make arrangements for running powers over portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Westfield and St. John, and from St. Leonards to Edmundston, if found advantageous and feasible, likewise with power to amalgamate with or acquire running powers over The Saint John Valley and Riviere Du Loup Railway, and The Woodstock and Centreville Railway, when constructed, and with all other powers incident to a Railway Company, and for the purpose of obtaining rights of way, lands for the purposes of the company and all necessary Railway powers for building, equipping, managing and maintaining the railway lines of the Company.

They cure every kidney ill from backache to Bright's disease.

Mr. Wm. Anderson, the well-known carpenter, Parkhill, Ont., made the following statement:

"Seven years ago I was attacked by symptoms of kidney trouble which steadily grew worse. I had pain across my back and in both sides, sometimes also between my shoulders and across my eyes. I was much troubled with dizziness, drowsiness and tired, weary feeling. The urine was high-colored with a reddish, sticky sediment. I have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and must say that they have done me marked good. They have cured the urinary difficulty, removing the pain from my back and head, and I am glad to say that the dizziness, drowsiness and tired feeling have disappeared completely."
