

WITH GREAT POMP.

King Edward Opened the Imperial Parliament.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE REFERRED TO THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY AWARD.

Admitting it Adverse to the Empire on Some Points.

(Special to Daily Herald.)

London, Feb. 2.—King Edward today opened what is expected to be an historic session of the British parliament, with all the ceremonial that has been in vogue since His Majesty's accession to the throne.

Early in the day the usual search of the vaults of the houses of parliament for conspirators, was made.

The passage of the royal procession from Buckingham was sadly marred by the drenched appearance of the cortege, owing to inclement weather.

Half a dozen state carriages with the suites preceded the ornate coach of state, drawn by eight cream colored Hanoverians and bearing the King and Queen, and the procession was surrounded by the usual retinue of eunuchs and outriders.

On arrival of the members of the House of Commons, King Edward read the speech from the throne.

Referring to the Alaskan boundary situation, His Majesty said that on some points the verdict was favorable to British claims and on others it had been adverse. Much as this last circumstance was to be deplored, it must nevertheless be a matter of congratulation that the misunderstanding, of which ancient boundary treaties made in ignorance of geographical facts are so fertile, have in this case been finally removed from the field of controversy.

Only a few people knew that money and valuables were kept in this room, and one of these few is under suspicion.

The Company are now engaged in storing their ice. sizes. The only complaint that he could hear of regarding Canadian cheese was that the size was too large for most of the storekeepers.

CANADIAN VS NEW ZEALAND BUTTER.

Canadian butter suffers to some extent by comparison with that of New Zealand, Mr. J. A. Ruddick, Chief of the Dairy Division, Ottawa, says the comparison is really not a fair one, because New Zealand butter is all grass butter, and it arrives fresh in Great Britain during our winter season, so that Canadian butter which comes into direct competition with it must necessarily be winter made or held summer stock. New Zealand butter, however, has a reputation in England for keeping quality, and it will be of interest to Canadians to learn how that reputation has been acquired.

In the first place, having no natural ice, the majority of the creameries are equipped with mechanical refrigerating machines. Their creamery refrigerators are kept fairly cold, but they have no refrigerator cars such as we have. The secret of their success is that the butter is shipped from the creameries twice a week to cold storage, where it is immediately placed in a chamber at ten degrees and held there until forwarded to England. It must be at least four full days in store before it is shipped, to give time for thorough freezing to the centre of the package. Although the butter is sometimes carried several hundred miles to the London steamer, its temperature must be below the freezing point of water; otherwise it will be refused and sent to a cold storage to be re-frozen. The temperature in the chambers of the steamers is about 10 degrees. It is placed in the steamer with frozen mutton, which must be kept at a low temperature. It is easy to understand that butter handled in such a manner, although it is two months old when it reaches the market, will have more life in it than some of our butter which has been held two or three weeks in a creamery at a temperature of 40 to 50 degrees. If our creamery owners and patrons expect to compete with the Danes, who are so close to the market, and with the New Zealanders, who employ such low temperatures almost from the day their butter is made, it is time they were making a more serious effort to improve matters at their end.
