JOHN MORLEY,

Distinguished English Statesman and Author,

TALKED TO A TORONTO REPORTER.

The Grange, Goldwin Smith's residence, Toronto, was flooded with cool, crisp sunshine Monday morning when a News representative called to see the Rt. Hon. John Morley, politician, litterateur and biographer of Mr. Gladstone. One man's opinion of the weather is worth about as much as another's, and it seemed tolerably certain that an average man might give even Mr. Morley pointers on a Canadian autumn.

The sequel to the interview will show that even on this universally engaging topic Mr. Morley's opinions are somewhat diplomatic.

Had the distinguished guest at the Grange been Pierpont Morgan, he would doubtless have sent an ambassador with his respects. Mr. Morley very considerably came down the great walnut staircase into the classic hallway in person.

"Good morning, Mr. Morley!" A fine English voice, rich enough for an Irish brogue, answered incisively, "Good morning! Well, what is it you wish to know?"

I had just been examining two Latin mottoes, one of which adorns a stained glass panel on either side of the huge doorway. One is Mr. Goldwin Smith's own motto: "Prudens qui patiens;" the other on the east side reads: "Fortuna fortis juvat"—"Fortune favors the brave."

This latter gave me peculiar consolation. For it is a well known fact that Mr. Morley persistently declines to be interviewed.

"A PLAIN, BLUNT MAN."

"Will you be seated?" he said with incisive cordiality.

I took a seat near the Greek statue of "I Echo" in the hallway—a very good place to be, under the circumstances. Mr. Morley eyed me with a most piercingly genial look, as of moonlight through frost. Would he yet smile? Perhaps. But it was an absorbingly studious face, not the retrospective cast of his distinguished host at the Grange, but clean-shaven and fresh-tinted by London fogs, with a persistently far-seeing glitter in his eyes. He was plainly habited in black frock coat, navy blue waistcoat and trousers, and an optimistic red tie. His whole appearance was that of a man whose rule of life in both mind and body is almost Roman simplicity. Evidently a practical, plain man; penetrative rather than reflective; inclined to look at truth with the naked eye. A man of letters—and of monosyllables. A Radical statesman, but not the picaresque politician who regales you with populist chatter. A practical philosopher, but indulging in no fine-drawn formalisms about beliefs and finalities. This and much more one might vaguely spell from the exuberantly intent face of Mr. Gladstone's biographer.

"No," he said decisively, without a tinge of irritation in his finely modulated voice, "I have nothing to say—not one word."

DISTINGUISHED MODESTY.

"Your point of view, sir, would be highly instructive."

"Not worth mentioning," was the modest reply.

"You are a full man, yet you do not care to impart? Well, of course, sir, we do not wish you to unburden your innermost secrets."

"And if I should do so, I have no golden truths to utter," was the quick, dignified response, "And, at all events, I am too busy, even were I ever so willing, to say anything."

Such modesty seemed highly respectable. It was the unobtrusive dignity of a great mind and a remarkable culture, essentially not on parade, and not necessarily anxious to scrutinize its immediate surroundings.

AN ESSENTIAL ENGLISHMAN.

"Have you got any news from England?" he asked.

And in that spontaneous question one caught for an instant the atmosphere of the inward John Morley. His thoughts were in England, to which in a few minutes he would be writing letters. Canada, the United States, the Empire were to him rather objective realities. England was the subjective self. He was not inquisitive; was not here perhaps to study "the man on the street," or to get the distinctly Canadian point of view. England, with her vast internal problems, her books, her statesmanship, and her great history, was to him the compelling reality. Canada, with its overpowering geography, its Grand Trunk Pacific, and its Blair conundrum, was rather an illustration. "Have you any news from England?" Had he recited Shakespeare's eulogy on "the precious stone set in the silver sea," he could not have better intimated his point of view.

Not having any "news from England," I rose to go. As the door opened, he said, "It is cold today?" "Well, rather, but a glorious day, don't you think?" "It is indeed," he admitted. "Somewhat finer than the English autumn, is it not?"

"And on that I have absolutely no opinion to offer," was the diplomatic reply. Good morning.

A dinner party in Mr. Morley's honor was given on Saturday evening at "The Grange." This afternoon the distinguished visitor addresses the Canadian Club after lunch. At three o'clock there will be a special convocation of the University of Toronto in the gymnasium building, and the honorary degree of LL.D. will be conferred on Mr. Morley. This will be followed in the evening by a dinner in his honor at Government House.

It is 37 years since Mr. Morley was in America, and he is paying his first visit to Canada.

Betting 4 to 1 on Roosevelt.

New York, Nov. 2.—Odds shifted again in the election betting today and the change favored President Roosevelt's chances. There was practically no change in odds on the state fight. Judge Herick maintaining his position as 10 to 7 favorite.

Poolak and Vaughan literally swamped the Broad street curb today, with an offer to bet $100,000 on President Roosevelt at 4 to 1. One bet was reported of $600 to $1,000 that Judge Parker would carry his state. The majority of bets made on this result, however, were made on a 2 to 1 basis.

Rosy estimates of the Republicans in New York and Kings counties were turned in at headquarters today. Kings county is conceded to Judge Parker by from only 12,000 to 15,000 and to Judge Herick by from 18,000 to 22,000.

NINE TICKETS.

Electors of the United States

HAVE AMPE ROOM FOR CHOICE NOV. 8.

New York, Nov. 2.—Nine national political conventions were held this year, and nine candidates for president and vice-president of the United States were nominated, but only six electoral tickets will be generally voted for on Tuesday next. Besides "the two great political parties," seven others made nominations—People's, Prohibition, Socialist, Socialist-Labor, Continental (labor), National Liberty (negro), and Lincoln (negro). The two negro parties, however, apparently ended their work when the national convention adjourned, as no electors have been selected, or at least none will appear on any official ballot, and the Continental party seems to be confined to Illinois, and perhaps to Chicago, the place of its origin.

The terms of thirty United States senators expire March 4th next. Seven of the vacancies have already been filled, and the Legislatures of twenty-three States to be elected Nov. 8th, will fill the other twenty-three. Members of the House of Representatives are to be voted for in all except three States, Maine, Vermont and Oregon, which have already elected their congressmen.

In twenty-seven States a governor, and all, or nearly all, the elective state officers, are to be chosen; in five states, minor state officers are to be selected, and in thirteen electors are to be voted for.

South Carolina enjoys the distinction of having only one ticket in the field. All the other states have from four to six, Illinois leading with seven. There are three Republican tickets in Delaware, but only one variation in the names of the candidates, the nominee for governor of the "regulars" refusing to abide by the decision of the factional conference, which resulted in the withdrawal of the "union" candidate, and an agreement upon a compromise ticket. The Republicans in Wisconsin will have a choice between two tickets for state officers, the "stalwarts" having decided to keep up their fight against LaFollette. The electors on both tickets, however, are identical.

POPULISTS BY THEMSELVES AGAIN.

The Democrat and People's party of Populists fused on the State ticket in Kansas and Nebraska, but in both states the Peoples' party named separate presidential electors. In Nevada the Democrats and one wing of the Silver party divided the minor state officers to be voted for, but the "Stalwart Silver" men put up their own electors.

The Peoples' party, which endorsed Mr. Bryan in 1896 and 1900, has an active organization in thirty-two of the forty-five states, the nominees for state officers and electors being on the official ballot in twelve states, and for electors in twenty. Efforts to this end were made in a number of other states, but the requisite number of signatures to petitions were not obtained.

The prohibitionists have electoral and state tickets in twenty-seven states, and electoral tickets in twelve others, one less than in 1900.

The Socialists, called in some states Social Democrats, have electoral and state tickets in thirty-two states, and electoral tickets in eleven others, seven more than in 1900.

The Socialist Labor party have whole or part electoral and state tickets in twenty states and electoral tickets in two others—six less than in 1900.

Fought With a Lynx.

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 1.—Edward B. Eaton, who has been spending some time hunting in the northwestern part of the State, tells this story:

J. Welcome Wheeler of Bridgeport, one of the most extensive lumbermen in the northwestern Connecticut, was on his property on Schaghticoke Mountain, Litchfield county, when his attention was attracted by low growls. Baiting a trap with a big muskrat he left it on the mountain. Upon returning he found a lynx a prisoner. It sprang viciously at him. Wheeler had no gun, but finally lassoed the animal. Enraged by his capture the beast fought desperately with his claws. It took three hours to subdue him.

Wheeler boxed his prey and shipped it alive to his home in Bridgeport. The lynx measures three and one-half feet from tip of nose to tail, has claws two inches in length, and weighs 50 pounds.

According to reports from Hartford hunters who are in the vicinity the borderland of this corner of the State is this season overrun by wild animals. Hartford men shot at a black bear recently, but it got away wounded.

A HELPLESS CHILD.

A weak and puny child is badly handicapped in the battle of life. It is isolated from the healthy enjoyments of its little fellow-beings. It cannot partake either of their play or their study work and progress in the world; its whole life is embittered by incapacity and weakness.

Any mother who expects to become a mother ought to know what Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will do both for her own health and safety during her time of trial and also to insure her in bequeathing a fair measure of health and strength to the prospective little one.

Loyalty and Distress.

A true story told by a Sherbourne street Toronto physician: It was a case of chronic bronchitis; the man was eighty years of age. The gigantic form of the doctor seemed to fill the little low-ceilinged room as he stood by the bed.

"Say, doctor, I've a question I'd like to ask yeh," announced the old man in a sepulchral tone.

"Yes," the doctor grew solemn and bent over ready to administer consolation.

"Dye think—"

"Yes," very solemn.

"Dye think yeh could get me out of this in time to—in time to vote?"

Doctor (more solemn still)—Well—a—how would you vote, supposin' I did get you out?

"I'm a-goin' to vote fur Robinette, an' I don't care who knows it."

"Good! That's all right. I'll do the best I can for you."

SIPIDO IN THE ARMY.

Employment of King Edward's Would be Assassin.

The Belgian Papers Say He is Thoroughly Reformed and Repentant.

Brussels, Nov. 1.—The Belgian newspapers are paying considerable considerable attention to the case of the young man Sipido, who has been in a reformatory since his attempt on the King while Prince of Wales since the appearance of the extraordinary rumor that he had been drafted into a Congo regiment appeared in The Times. Sipido was not sent to Congo, but, although the order of the Belgian court was that he should be detained in a reformatory until he was of age, his family some time since, succeeded in obtaining his admission to the Belgian army ballot and have now secured his reception into the army a year and a half before the time came for his release from the reformatory. He is incorporated in the 11th Regiment of the line of Hasselt.

It seems that the young man's family attribute his release and incorporation in the army to the fact that he has become an exceptionally good musician; he has been already put into the band of his regiment. At the reformatory he could not practice his trade, and instead he studied music, with the result that his teachers say there remains nothing to teach him. Those who have seen some of his musical compositions declare they are as good as any produced by students of the Brussels Conservatoire. Sipido's parents are indignant at the statement that he was found physically unfit for the army and that he tried to escape from it. They say he most ardently desired to become a soldier, and will make a good and loyal one.

As for the attempt on the King, they say he never speaks of it without crying. "I do not know how I did such a thing," he said to me," said his father, "and he never ceases to ask my pardon for it." The Belgian newspapers, which seem to consider some explanation of how this individual was permitted to become a Belgian soldier necessary, argue from this statement that Sipido is proved to be thoroughly reformed and repentant.

Canadian Poultry Ahead.

Canadian exhibitors of poultry at the World's Fair, St. Louis, had 1,000 entries, and in most of the classes in which they exhibited they practically swept the board. In Hamburgs, Polands and ornamental bantams, Canada, through Wm. McNeil, R. Oke, London; H. B. Donovan; Geo. Bogue, Strathroy, has won nearly everything. In Bluff Leghorns, Jas. Dundas, Toronto, wins first prize for hens and pullets, whilst Cornwall of Thamesville wins first for cockerels, and also some minor prizes, his pullets being selected as color models for bluff breeds. H. Dunne, Toronto, won four firsts and two seconds for White Minorcas; J. H. Winshall, Brantford, two firsts for Black Minorcas, Wm. Barber, Toronto, was a heavy winner in Games and Game Bantams. James Arthur, London, won two firsts in Silver Wyandottes, and afterwards sold his pen of birds for $104. In Buff Cochins two firsts went to Canada; and in Houdans, Dorkings and Andalusians, the principal prizes were won by Beck, Bogue, Cosh and LaRose. Geo. Colwell, Paris, and M. T. Burn, Tillsonburg, won a large share of prizes in ducks and geese.
