

THE NEW MARKET SENSATION.

Prominent Ontario Lawyer Charged with Robbing Estates.

ASSERTED THAT A BOGUS MORTGAGE FIGURES IN THE CASE.

Newmarket, Ont., May 13.—"That Thomas Hiram Lloyd, did receive $1,512.25 in trust moneys and that he has refused to account for same" is the charge contained in a warrant issued last night against T. Hiram Lloyd of this town, one of the best-known barristers north of Toronto. Mr. Lloyd was arrested by Chief Constable Anderson as he came from Toronto, and was promptly taken before the magistrates, Col. Lloyd and T. J. Woodcock, and arraigned. He was not asked to plead or elect, and at his own request was remanded till Monday at 2 o'clock. Personal bail of $1,000 was given as well as a bond for a like amount by the defendant's father, Mr. David Lloyd, Registrar of North York.

No arrest in recent years in this section has occasioned so much excitement, as the defendant's family is well and favorably known throughout the county. Nothing was known about the arrest except to the Crown officer and the parties interested until late today, when the information leaked out, and all who had dealings with the defendant barrister commenced an investigation to determine if their accounts were right.

CREDITORS ARE ALARMED.

Farmers all over this section are interested in the prosecution, which is intended to make Mr. Lloyd account for the specific sum of over fifteen hundred dollars. The defendant went down to the city today, leaving behind a lot of clients who have become alarmed over the safety of their money. The Crown officers here, who are keeping everything to themselves, were in consultation today with half a dozen widows and farmers who were clients of Lloyd and had heard of his arrest. One of these was Mr. Silas Toole, the wealthy farmer, who was goldbricked out of $5,000 only a few years ago by a slick gentleman from Toronto, who came out to buy his property at a very high figure. Mr. Harry West the owner of the Willis farm up Yonge street, stated tonight that he held Mr. Lloyd's two receipts for $300 each, money which was supposed to have been paid to the heir of the late Mr. Willis. West said that he had seen the person in question, who claims that she did not receive the money. One of the Crown officers, in speaking of the arrest tonight, was of the opinion, after consulting with everybody, that Lloyd would have between $30,000 and $40,000 of trust money to account for.

DID MORTGAGE NOT EXIST?

Barrister T. J. Robertson, an ex-

Mayor of the town, is acting for J. A. Weddell estate, the executor of which preferred the charge against Lloyd. The charge arises out of money advanced to Lloyd six years ago by the executors of the estate, Benjamin Fairbairn and Robert H. Belfrey. The money was supposed to have been loaned to a resident of Toronto, who, it was said, gave a mortgage to Lloyd on property in East Toronto and in the city. Rumors have been rife recently that all was not right, and it said that the executors went down to Toronto and found out that no such mortgage existed. It is true that they received the interest for the last six years from the defendant, Mr. Lloyd was met on his return from Toronto on Thursday night by Chief Constable Anderson and the solicitors for the executors, and his inability to settle the claim resulted in his arrest. On his appearance before the magistrate he asked for time to settle the matter. If given until fall he said he could realize on his property and pay everybody who presented claims. Mr. Lloyd is the owner of the Sovereign Bank building here, a forty-acre farm, and a number of houses rented at good figures. He also claims to be entitled to a large sum of money from property now held by a fraternal insurance society. The defendant is about 35 years of age and has a wife and one child. He has been practicing here for about twelve years and has handled thousands upon thousands of dollars for clients, who had the utmost confidence in his honesty and integrity. He was a very estimable young man and was known to the legal profession all over the province.

SUFFERED IN MINING SPECULATION.

Mr. Lloyd is probably best known outside of Newmarket, in Toronto, where he conducted many cases in the courts for his clients. He is a member of the National Club there. His friends say that if there has been any wrongdoing he has got behind in his accounts owing to heavy losses sustained by dealing extensively in Le Roi and War Eagle mining stocks, which turned out the worst kind of investments for him. Mr. Lloyd took his arrest coolly, and warned the executors of the Weddell estate in court that if he was committed to trial he would not pay one cent. He did not admit any liability. Crown Attorney Drayton of Toronto is expected to conduct the prosecution in the Magistrate's court on Monday.

GO GLADLY TO CERTAIN DEATH.

The Men Who Work Behind the Scenes in Modern Warfare.

THE "HUNG-HUTZERS" PERFORM THE MOST DARING EXPLOITS IN IN MANCHURIA, TRYING TO CUT THE LINES OF THE RUSSIAN RAILWAYS.

Under the title, "Behind the Scenes of the War," F. A. McKenzie writes the following article in the London Daily Mail:

"He showed no sign of emotion," said an enthusiastic friend when describing to me the farewell of a famous officer from the Shimabara Station, Tokio. "His wife knew that he was going to almost certain death, yet she, and her children too, bade farewell openly and bravely, without a sign of grief."

"Why did death seem so certain?" I asked. "Soldiers come back from the war."

"Yes," my friend replied, "but he was going to organize the Hung-Hutzes behind Harbin, and while he may destroy the Russian railways, he can scarcely hope to save his own life. If the Russians catch him they will hang him without delay."

For more than a year past the name of the Hung-Hutze—Chung Chutze, as he is often called—the Red-bear, has been familiar to English readers. He is popularly spoken in England as a brigand. He is sometimes that, but he is very much more. He is the man in revolt against the powers that be. The successful Hung-hutze of today may be, if he plays his cards well, the highly-honored Chinese general of tomorrow.

The organization of the Hung-hutze bands is elaborate and far-reaching, and yet at the same time worked independently from different localities. Primarily the Red-bear leagues were a combination of village leagues or organizations for self-protection and aggression. Out of this has grown the present network of secret societies.

A COUNTRY OF OUTLAWS.

Manchuria, it is well to remember, has never been, save in the limited territories immediately under Russian control, a land where life and property are over-secure. Each district has to organize as best it can, and it has few means of defence save what it creates for itself. In hundreds of little villages you will find a great strong roomy keep, with high castellated walls running twenty feet or more from the ground, with gigantic, iron-shod doors, with gun embrasures and with outstanding turrets commanding the remainder of the walls. These keeps are prepared for deliberate sieges. Food is kept in them, and there is abundant room for the storage of the property of the people around. Near the tops of the walls parapets are built along which bowmen and riflemen can stand in safety and fire down on any attacking force.

Places such as these have not been built for amusement. In a land where crime meets with hideous punishment when punished at all, there are many temptations for a poor man to become a permanent outlaw. In a bad winter a usually honest peasant is driven to steal. He yields, and knowing that discovery may mean a lifetime in a wretched torture prison, he flees to the hills and becomes a robber by profession. Joining others of his kind, he settles in one of the large waste tracts in the northern mountains and establishes a permanent nomad community. He and his allies marry; they have their own system of government, and they strengthen their position and increase their means by occasional raids on distant villages. The villagers, who have organized to resist them, have a succession of bad seasons. They too, are tempted to raise their defence organization to plunder their neighbors.

DARING RAIDS.

The bands are incredibly bold. When I was last in Liaoyang, although the city was held by Japanese guards, robbers came down night after night from the hills and penetrated the Chinese quarter, exchanging ing shots with the soldiers. A band of horsemen will pick their time and ride into a large city and raid it as boldly as a gang of desperadoes will hold up a western mining town.

Your Chinaman is eminently practical. If the robbers enter and surprise a large town, as they often do, the authorities submit, pay their ransom, and are immune for a time. Villages— weaker, and therefore more subject to plundering—have had to erect their keeps to protect them. If a robber band is very troublesome the government sends out soldiers against it. If it fights and overcomes the soldiers once or twice the authorities begin to think that the services of such brave men are worth securing, and probably offer the leader a generalship in the army of the governor of the province.

The Chinese business men found the Hung-hutze interfered with trade, making internal transport unsafe. To obviate this, the robbers very kindly placed trustworthy agents in several of the big towns. If you are at Newchwang and desire to despatch a stock of valuable goods inland, your Chinese "number one boy" goes to the Hung-hutze representative there and either hires one or two or more men as a guard, or arranges to pay a certain allowance for safety, a form of "burglary insurance." "Once this is done the goods are as safe as travelling through England, for any outsider who dared to lay hands on them would have quick vengeance wrought on them by the robbers themselves. Without question many of the robber bands are linked together, although how cannot be told. One chief boasts that he can bring 20,000 men into the field whenever he wants. Probably he is a lying boaster, but his strength is certainly considerable.

THE HUNG-HUTZE BRIGADE.

The Japanese, always ready to take advantage of any means of strengthening their hands, early realized that the Hung-hutzes might become valuable allies in the campaign against Russia. Accordingly, three or four years before the war broke out, a number of Japanese non-commissioned officers and others were informally sent into Northern Manchuria. Their business was to settle there, to learn the language, to become acquainted with the people and to make friends. They were followed by still higher officers, and I have been told, although it is a subject on which exact details are impossible to obtain, that a well known Japanese major-general proceeded to take chief command.

The work of the Hung-hutzes under Japanese control was simply to break up the railway and prevent supplies coming through from Europe to the Russian forces at the front. Their doings have been a mystery. We all know that their presence has compelled the Russians to maintain substantial guards far along the railway line. How often their raids have been a success and how often failure, none can tell. At best the raiders can do little more than inflict a temporary and easily repaired injury on the Siberian road, unless they place a particularly heavy charge of explosives on a favored spot on bridge or culvert. A train wrecked, a few sentries murdered, the railway guard stopped, are almost the most that can be expected. Thus the Hung-hutze has not been directly the powerful factor that some anticipated. Indirectly, however, he has accomplished one great result. He has forced the Russians to treat a thousand miles of their line of rear communications as though running through an enemy's country, and he has diverted the energies of tens of thousands of Russian soldiers who might otherwise be fighting the Japanese. The Russians, not slow to learn from their foe, have now in turn their agents among these robber bands, and are themselves enlisting the aid of some of them.

MAN'S MOST CRITICAL AGE.

Very often the vital resources are small at forty-two, but if not then, between fifty-seven and sixty-two years of age there is a strange slow-down and loss of vitality. It is important that this transient period of decay should be checked, strength must be imparted to the tired brain, the weakened nerves must be fortified. The wise man will use Ferrozone whose potency is particularly applicable to these critical periods. Ferrozone quickens the whole being, imparts vigor and power, pushes back the onset of senility in a very manifest way. It's because Ferrozone gives strength, vitality and vigor that it is useful to old men. Try it. Price 70c.
