FOR LOVE OR HONOR.

The only one who was completely at his ease, and who, in fact, extracted a certain satisfaction from the situation, was the Admiral. Naturally, he did not enter very deeply into the matrimonial schemes of the young, and with the indifference of a man well along in years, he doubted that it would be a matter of any great difficulty either to make Elizabeth forget, if necessary, the Irishman, in whom his obtuse vision had detected that she was greatly interested, or, in case it suited his purpose better, to make his son forget Elizabeth in the presence of some other rharmer whom he might select. His purpose was, as ever, the paramount consideration with the Admiral.

He had conceived a brilliant idea, which he fondly hoped would result, were it to be realized, in the capture of the notorious Paul Jones, who was the object of consuming desire on the part of every naval and military man in the three kingdoms. So his own idea, and so desirous was he of bagging the game, that he would not have hesitated to sacrifice the affections of his son, the happiness of his ward, or to brush aside almost everything, save his honor, which might stand in his way.

The young Irishman had clearly forfeited his life by his action; nay, more, now that he recalled his name, he remembered that he had been found guilty of high treason, and, like his father, was under sentence of death for that as well. In had a double hold upon him, therefore. The powers of the Admiral, who was one of the leading men of the realm, were unusual large, and, as a state of martial law, had been proclaimed on the coast, he was supreme as to life and death in matters where any military exigency could be urged.

He chuckled to himself that he held in his hand two of the master cards—love of life and love of woman. The third, love of honor, which O'Neill was possessed of, was a high one, to be sure, but he trusted by clever play to win the game, since the odds was with him. Elizabeth had become a state paper—a pledge in pawn—to him; O'Neill another piece, or player. He had not yet formulated any plan of carrying out his great idea, but one was already germinating in his mind, so that in the end, under the stimulus of when he heard the report from Old Price the next day, especially as the hours fled away and the young lieutenant did not rejoin his ship, in spite of the absence of the rest of his squadron, the Commodore at once hastened to the rendezvous with the Richard alone, and there determined to take a small hand in the game himself while waiting for the Pallas, the Alliance and the others to assemble. Cautious inquiries which he caused to be made on shore had informed him that, as he expected, O'Neill had been apprehended. A less kindly man than Paul Jones would have left him to his fate; but that was not his way.

Early next morning, being Wednesday, September 22, O'Neill had arisen and gone down on the terrace of the castle overlooking the ocean and the ships in the harbor, where he met Lady Elizabeth. She was gazing listlessly over the causeway at a horseman galloping along the road. "Do I interrupt reminiscences of a tete-a-tete, madam?" said he, saluting her with a profound bow. "Reminiscences such as mine are never interrupted," she replied. "You were—"

"Saying good bye to my—my—cousin."

"Has your ladyship no dearer title than that by which to designate him?"

"Not yet," she replied, wearily.

"Ah, I perceive," he continued jealously. "The natural regret at the absence of your betrothed, for—"

"No, no, not that! How can you trifle with me so at this moment? I reproached her because I—why do I tell you these things? You constrain me, sir, I—"

"Forgive me! You need not finish, Lady Elizabeth," he said, with sudden gravity. "As for me, I must needs trifle or die. Life in the freshness of the morning, the white capped ocean stretching before us in the sunlight, the gentle breeze playing across our faces, is sweet to think on. With youth and rank and station, it would be heavenly spent with you. Without you I welcome the death that your guardian will undoubtedly put upon me."

"Yet you waited so long—a year and a half—why did you not come? I—"

"She stopped. She had spoken in a low, tender whisper, looking down at the sea beneath them and plucking nervously at the loose plaster of the old walk. Death so imminent for love and lover—nay, not for love; that were eternal—brake down the petty convention. Where were death and love, there, too, should truth and honesty be—and honor."

He laid his strong hand gently down upon the small white one outlined upon the gray weather beaten rock of the parapet. With upturned palm she met his grasp. Her eyes were listed now. She drew strength from his strength; a dawning hope flickered into being in her torn heart. He was so strong and true that he surely could do something—there must be some other way. It was the tribute woman pays to man.

He read aright, with eyes keen from affection, the mute, piteous appeal in her sweetly lifted face, but he could only smile sadly in reply. There was no other way, then, in the marked path she must walk. Have mercy, Lord!

"Was it long for you, dearest?" he queried, his dark face aflame. "To me—I have been a fool. Nothing should have kept me from you. To trust to messengers, letters—a fool—too late!" Silence! The hand unclasped; ties were broken. "Too late!" He turned bitterly away.

"Would that we had met in happier days!" she murmured sadly, making a brave attempt at self control.

"No reproaches, Lady Elizabeth," he answered, the touch of formality in the address showing his own equal strife. "What must be must be! At least, I have met you before I die, and for a year and a half I have thought of you and dreamed of you and held you the lady of my heart. Even death itself cannot rob me of that sweet joy—for it is past."

THE DENTIST BILL OF PRINCE LOUIS.

It Came to $83 an Hour or $250 a Tooth—Battenberg Paid Smilingly.

According to The New York Times, Prince Louis of Battenberg was looked upon as "sassy" by the New York dentist, whose bill for $1000 for fixing four teeth has already been referred to briefly in the despatches. The Times' story of the affair is worth quoting:

"Personally," said Rear Admiral Prince Louis of Battenberg, in his farewell address to the American public, "I have enjoyed every hour of my stay in America, including the time at the dentist's, as he overhauled my teeth in ship shape fashion."

Yesterday His Serene Highness awoke to find that his enjoyment as far as the dentist was concerned, was a little premature, for the very first thing that he got on arising was a bill from Dr. Wilbur M. Dailey of 30 West Thirty-Ninth Street, for $1000, for overhauling his molars in ship-shape fashion.

Prince Louis looked at the bill—$83.33 1-3 an hour—and paid it immediately. The Prince had been in Dr. Dailey's chair for four hours, and had just four of his teeth attended to.

Just before the Prince left the Hotel Netherland, to pay his farewell visit to Rear Admiral Evans, an American friend called to say good-bye. In the course of his brief talk the Prince referred to his dental experience, and showed the receipted bill for $1000.

"One thousand dollars for four teeth," gasped the astonished American. "Surely you must be mistaken. You didn't pay it, I'm sure."

"Yes, I did," replied the Prince. "Why not?"

"Because," replied the American, "it is too much, and you should, in justice to yourself, do something about it."

Prince Louis finally came to his way of thinking, and decided to follow his advice. Accordingly, he wrote a note to Dr. Dailey, in which he requested him to send to Sir Percy Sanderson, the British consul at New York, a detailed statement of the whole affair. Whether or not it had been received by Sir Percy was not made public last night.

Dr. Dailey was not at home last evening, and a maid said that she had not the slightest idea when he would return. No one in the house, she added, had any authority to make any statements or explanations in behalf of Dr. Dailey.

Last night a retired American naval officer, one of the best known in the country, told the complete story of Prince Louis' dental experience.

"Right at the start," he said, "I want to correct the report current this afternoon that Prince Louis hesitated about paying the bill, or any way whatever tried to get it reduced."

"Nothing of the sort happened. Prince Louis did not hesitate a moment, but, like the fine fellow that he is, paid the bill promptly without comment of any sort. Shortly afterwards an American friend called on him, and, on seeing the bill, declared that it was unfair and told the Admiral that he should not have paid it. Prince Louis then placed the whole matter in the hands of Sir Percy Sanderson, with instructions to settle it as he saw fit. He had previously written to Dr. Dailey that he had been informed that the bill was unfairly large, and requested Sir Percy Sanderson.

"Prince Louis said that the dentist had been exceedingly courteous. However, no one likes to be overcharged. It is a most regrettable incident, and no one regrets more than Prince Louis' American friends that he should have been called on to pay such an exorbitant bill for a twelve-hours' experience in a dental chair."

Dr. Dailey, it is said, was recommended to Prince Louis by a well known society woman of this city, and Philadelphia. Altogether, it is understood that he had three sittings part of the work being done on Sunday afternoon.

It was said yesterday that Prince Louis had appealed to his friend, Col. R. M. Thompson, president of the National Academy Alumni, association, when he received Dr. Dailey's bill, according to the story, having refused to pay such a sum as was demanded.

"The Prince did not appeal to me or anyone else," said Colonel Thompson. "He paid the bill in the same kindly manner that he has done everything else during his visit in the United States. It was only after he had been informed by the American friend that the bill was exorbitant that he pursued the course he did in reference to it. Oh, yes, it's true the dentist charged him $1000 all right."

Social Hour.
All church members should be present at this meeting and as many others as possible.

Miss Annie Harrison of Marysville, spent Sunday in Gibson the guest of her friend, Miss Alma Flowers.

All the churches are preparing for Christmas and very likely some of the young people will have a delightful time this year as usual.

The Wornout Nerves, The Weak Heart, The Tired Brain, The Wasted Strength.

What a multitude of women there are who feel that these words exactly suit their case. From early morn until late at night they have been on the go, year in and year out, attending to the daily household duties, looking after the wants of her children and spending the rest of her time attending to social and church work. Is it any wonder then that sooner or later there comes a general collapse? The action of the heart becomes weak and palpitating, the nerves become unstrung, the brain feels in a whirl half the time and the usual force of vitality is lacking.

It is at this time a woman should look after herself. If she does not, serious female disorders may set in and often cause weary months and years of helplessness and miserable suffering. What she wants is something to build up her system. For this purpose there is nothing to equal

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

They are the women's friend in every sense of the word.

They will strengthen the weak heart, tone up the shaky, starved nerves, make the brain clear, and restore the lost vitality.

Mrs. George Lohman, Stanley Section, N. B., writes: "I was greatly troubled with weak and dizzy spells and was so run down I could not attend to my household duties. I bought two boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and after taking them I found that my trouble had all passed away. I am now strong and healthy again."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25. If your dealer does not handle them, send direct to The Milburn Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

SICK HEADACHE

Many varieties of headache exist, those most prevalent being sick or bilious headache, nervous headache, headache from constipation, etc.

Headache is an effect of disease, the cry of the suffering body for relief from some oppressing disorder.

Undoubtedly the cause must be removed in order to cure the headache permanently. Wrong action of the stomach, liver or bowels is responsible for nine out of ten cases of headache.

In sick headache (a very common form) there is sometimes nausea and vomiting and usually constipation.

In nearly all forms of headache

has proved itself a specific—a medicine that has cured where all others failed.

Keep the stomach, liver and bowels in perfect working order by the use of nature's regulator and tonic, Burdock Blood Bitters, which cures all forms of headache by removing the cause.

Miss L. Smith, Morrisburg, Ont., writes: "I desire to let you know how much good Burdock Blood Bitters has done for me. I was troubled with headaches all the time, and could get no relief, until a friend told me of your Burdock Blood Bitters. After taking two bottles of it, I can say that I am completely cured."

B.B.B. is for sale at all druggists and general stores. Do not accept something "just as good."
