ANAEMIA--POOR BLOOD.

Headaches, Dizziness, Heart Palpitation and Consumption Follows.

Anamia--watery blood--is a treacherous trouble. It steals insidiously from slight symptoms to dangerous disease. The thin watery blood shows itself at first in pale lips, wan face, breathlessness, heart palpitation, lost appetite. If the trouble is not checked and cured, consumption follows; coughing, spitting, clammy night sweats, a total breakdown and death. What the anaemic sufferer needs is more blood--more strength. And there is nothing in the whole wide world will give new blood and new strength so surely and so speedily as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose helps to send rich, red blood coursing through the system, bringing strength to weak lungs and all parts of the body. Thousands testify to the truth of these statements, among them Miss Eberine Vilandre, St. Germain, Que., who says:-- "While attending school my health began to give way. The trouble came on gradually and the doctor who attended me said it was due to overstudy and that a rest would put me right. But instead of getting better, I grew weaker. I suffered from headaches and dizziness, and at night I did not sleep well. I was troubled with pains in the back, my appetite left me and I grew pale as a corpse. Finally I became so weak I was forced to remain in bed. As the doctor did not help me any, I asked my father to get me Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before I had used two boxes there was an improvement, and when I had taken a half dozen boxes I was again in perfect health. I believe all weak girls will find new health if they will take the pills."

Anaemia, indigestion, heart trouble, rheumatism, kidney trouble and the special ailments of women are all due to poor blood, and are all cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You can get these pills from any medicine dealer, or by mail post paid at 50c. a box or six boxes for $2.50, by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Prince William.

(Special Correspondence to the Herald.)

Jan. 11.--The ladies of the Prince William Presbyterian Church Auxiliary held their annual thank-offering on New Year's evening. An interesting program was well carried out and the collection which goes to missions, amounted to $56.19.

The Prince William congregation at the new year presented their pastor, Rev. Wm. Ross, with a valuable fur-lined coat, and M. S. Ross with a well filled purse, with best wishes for a happy and prosperous new year and continued success in the Master's work. "The Star of Hope" Mission Band also presented Mrs. Ross with their first missionary quilt, upon which she sets a very high value.

A SERENELY HAPPY MAN

Is Mr. Thos. McGlashan of North Pelham, who was cured of muscular rheumatism by Nerviline, the most rheumatic remedy in the world. "I suffered all manner of pain for years," he writes, "and Nerviline was the only thing that did me any good. I can heartily recommend Nerviline for all forms of rheumatism; it goes to the very core of the pain and brings lasting relief. Let every sufferer from lame back, aching joints and swelled limbs use Nerviline." It's sure to cure and costs only 25c. for a large bottle.

THE GRAND DUKES.

Practically Control the Destinies of Russia.

THEY MUST BE SONS AND GRAND-SONS OF TSARS.

Not a First-class Statesman Among Them.

Russia has no statesman worthy the name. The heads of her departments are merely glorified clerks. Count Lamsdorff, for instance. At the time of the Malacca incident he was driven from the pillar of admiralty arrogance to the post of grand ducal dictation. During the last generation M. Witte alone has had the courage of his convictions, aristocratic intrigue and financial chicanery.

From the outset he was radically opposed to the Manchurian expansionist policy. He foresaw the complications which have now come to a climax. But he fell. And why? Because the grand ducal party, as it is commonly called, was against him. His most resolute and bitter opponent was the Grand Duke Alexander Michaelovitch, the Tsar's brother-in-law, whose connection with the Yalu Timber Company and other Manchurian enterprises has been largely responsible for the present war. The younger son of a younger son, the Grand Duke Alexander, is a comparatively poor man. He has no estates to speak of, and when M. Besobzaroff, the Cecil Rhodes of Manchuria, dangled before his eyes the bait of a fabulous fortune, he did not hesitate to identify himself with an undertaking which has already acquired historical notoriety.

The Grand Duke Alexander's influence with the Tsar is paramount. His counsel is strengthened and confirmed by his wife, the Grand Duchess Xenia, the Tsar's elder and favorite sister. She is devoted to her husband, and both in temperament and manner bears great resemblance to the Tsar. It would be unjust to deny the Grand Duke Alexander the virtue of patriotism. He is Pan-Slavist to the core--a patriot a la Russe--which implies an entire disregard of promises, obligations and international susceptibilities. He recognizes in England the great rival and opponent of Russia in the Far East. If report may be credited, his imperial dislike for England is not far removed from plebeian Anglophobia. To sum up the Grand Duke's character, he may be described as an ardent nationalist of mediocre ability, with a highly developed strain of the compromiser. As president of the directorate of the Black Sea volunteer fleet, he stoutly upheld the amiable sophistries of those genial freebooters, and, in consequence, came to loggerheads with the Tsar's uncle, the Grand Duke Alexis, high admiral of the fleet. The latter is an easy-going, good-natured bachelor, whose political philosophy may be epitomized in the words "anything for a quiet life." He is an ardent lover of the fine arts in general, and, in particular, is an earnest student of the ballet. In this pursuit his generosity is proverbial, and in a late instance amounted, it is said, to a donation of £60,000.

In principle the Grand Duke Alexis was opposed to war with Japan, but beyond a mild protest, he made no practical effort to prevent it. It came as something of a surprise that the Grand Duke Alexis should have cast aside his wonted apathy when the Malacca affair was attaining critical dimensions. Without his support there is little doubt that the Pacific party, headed by the Foreign Office, would have been over-ruled by the Grand Duke Alexander and the inevitably truculent and bellicose chiefs of the admiralty.

Much covert blame has been imputed to the Grand Duke Alexis in connection with the defective condition of the Russian navy. He has been held responsible for the poor equipment of the ships, their inferior armament and their incompetent manning. In point of fact, the resources and material at his disposal were altogether inadequate, and he was constitutionally incapable of the phenomenal initiative required to galvanize the mediaeval inertia of Russia into recognition of modern necessities.

The Grand Duke Serge, another uncle of the Tsar's, is a man of totally different character. He belongs rather to the hectoring type of Prussian militarism, stern and pitiless, to the points of tyranny and inhumanity. He is known as one of the principal Jew haters and baiters in Russia. He is the military governor of Moscow, and to this day conforming Jews, even the most wealthy, is very common, but awfully dangerous because it causes deafness and leads to consumption. Cure is as certain to follow the use of Catarrh-zone as day is to follow night. You simply breathe the fragrant healing Catarrh-zone which spreads through the nasal passages, throat and lungs, driving out every vestige of catarrh. "I was cured of chronic catarrh of the nose and throat," writes Ernest M. Wilkinson of Lauretton, "after many years of misery by Catarrh-zone, which is a splendid remedy to free the air passages from mucous. Catarrh-zone relieved quickly and my cure has been permanent." Price $1 for two months' treatment; trial size 25c.

CATARRH OF THE HEAD

are not allowed to sleep a night within the confines of the city. Of all the Tsar's family the Grand Duke Serge is probably the most uncompromising upholder of autocracy. The present system of government has little to fear from the moujik (peasant) element, which is grossly gull and unenterprising, with few natural gifts save the capacity for suffering and illimitable endurance.

An unbridgable gulf divides the "people" from the "other people," as Sir William Harcourt once described the governing class of England. The moujik may, therefore, be ignored, and men of the stamp of Grand Duke Serge are at liberty to expend their relentless energies on the suppression of the only intelligent and therefore dangerous section of the lower orders, the Semites. The Grand Duke Serge owes some of his influence with his nephew, the Tsar, to the fact that his wife, nee Princess Elizabeth of Hesse, is an elder sister of the Tsaritsa.

The Grand Duke Vladimir, also an uncle of the Tsar, is permanent commander-in-chief of the Russian army. He is intimately identified with the war party, although neither expansionist nor politician. He has had much to do with the management of the Red Cross funds, a subject which is tabooed in St. Petersburg. He is also the father of the Grand Dukes Cyril and Boris, of whom the former won a medal for valor for saving his own life from the wreck of the Petropavlovsk, and the latter greatly distinguished himself by his unquenchable endeavors to instruct General Kuropatkin in the conduct of the Manchurian operations. They are both, in addition, fine, handsome young men about town, bon viveurs, and, in all senses, chips of the old block.

The Grand Duke Nicholas Nicolaievitch, who was frequently mentioned as likely to supersede General Kuropatkin in the command of the Manchurian army, has held aloof alike from the world's intrigue and politics. He is the tallest officer in the Russian army, and an excellent judge of horses. His military capacity is somewhat of an unknown quantity, although he served as aide-camp in the Russo-Turkish war. Most of his time is spent in his country estate, and he is a fair type of an English country gentleman of a century ago.

The Grand Duke Constantine is the most intellectual and cultivated of the Tsar's uncles. He is a poet of considerable talent, an enthusiastic patron of literature and the drama, and has erected a theatre in his private palace.

In a sense the Grand Dukes form a remarkable group of men. They practically control the destinies of 130,000,000 of people. They bear among them the burthen of a responsibility sufficient to appal the most commanding genius. It is a matter of deep regret that even the optimist cannot credit a single blood relation of His Imperial Majesty the Tsar, with the exceptional qualities indispensable for coping with and mastering the crisis which Russia is so rapidly approaching.

WHAT IS DYSPEPSIA?

Qualms, nausea, longing for food, yet dreading to eat. You may have the real thing, but Ferrozone will cure you like it did S. D. Huntington of Hamilton, who says: "I frequently was attacked with such acute dyspepsia that I thought it must be heart disease. I used Ferrozone and got relief. I kept on using Ferrozone and was cured. My digestion is in perfect order and I can eat anything today." Nothing is as good as Ferrozone for dyspepsia and those bothered with weak stomachs. Price 50c. at druggists.

Where Time Changes.

The line where "time changes" where a ship loses a day going west and gains one going east--is drawn irregularly down the Pacific coast of New Zealand, whose time is nineteen and a half hours "faster" than San Francisco's.

MEMBERS SWORN IN.

York's M. P. Considered Youthful Looking.

(Special Despatch to Toronto Globe) Ottawa, Jan. 11.--The House of Commons resembled a beehive this morning. Members swarmed in all directions and there was a loud buzz of conversation. It took just twenty minutes to swear in the Commons, although the signing of the roll occupied a longer time. Dr. Flint, Clerk of the House, and Lieut.-Col. Smith, the Sergeant-at-Arms, administered the oath to the members in batches.

It was sharp noon when the swearing-in commenced. His Honor Speaker Sutherland, Dr. Sproule, Mr. Cochrane and Lieut.-Col. Tisdale were the first four to take the oath.

The oath was administered to Sir Willrid Laurier and Messrs. Hyman and Emmerson at the same moment.

Dan Derbyshire, the member for Brockville, towered head and shoulders above the rest of his fellow-members. His huge bulk caused him to be easily noticed in the throng.

Some of the members are very youthful in appearance, notably Mr. Parent of Montmorency, and Mr. Crockett of York, N. B. Seeing the members grouped together, it was impossible to recognize at a glance the number of new faces, and how many old members had fallen by the wayside. Each member's desk has green blotters, which gives the chamber a curious effect. "Very appropriate," said one member, whose attention was drawn to this; "it is a green parliament."

When the hour for adjournment arrived, 130 members had signed the roll.

FINE POLICE STATION.

Largest One in the Country Nearing Completion in the Bronx.

The largest police station in the United States, and probably in the world, is nearing completion at Third Avenue, and 116th street, in the Bronx. It will be to all intents and purposes the police headquarters of the Bronx, says the New York World.

Looking toward the immense area these Bronx police stations have to cover, there is an extraordinarily large stable connected with the house. Stalls are provided for at least 150 horses for mounted men. There is nothing so certain as that all policemen look to the mounted branch of the service as the coming solver of many evils, and that in a residential section, as the Bronx is bound to be for many years, mounted men can do excellent work.

This was shown recently when, in a secluded part of the Bronx, four men waylaid and shot a man and were seen to escape by a foot policeman. He outran and captured two of them, the third--in whose pocket was afterward found the pistol--escaped toward the Italian section in Arthur Avenue. A mounted policeman pursued him and captured him nearly a mile from the place where the shooting occurred.

Situated at the bend of the Third Avenue elevated track, at 116th street, the new police station for the Morrisania section stands out in a particularly attractive manner. It is three stories high, and covers a large lot of ground. Architect Charles Volz, who made the plans and is supervising the erection for the city, studied the needs of the older houses for months before he commenced the work of planning this one, and in it are concreted some of the wishes of every prominent inspector in this city.

The building, exclusive of the ground, that it stands on, will cost upward of $100,000, and will be even more elaborate in its fittings than the much-praised Tremont station-house. The trimmings in the police station at Tremont, for instance are of marble and brass, ornamented with polished wood. The sergeant's desk at the Tremont station is sometimes mistaken by men taken before it for some kind of altar.

The new station at High Bridge is another of the series of Bronx stations that take the breath away from Manhattan. The stained glass green lights in front of it are mistaken for hall marks of the elegant mansion of some local nabob. The general air of sanctity about the interior arrangements, mural decorations, etc., has been known to make people who have come to complain turn away in the belief that they have unwittingly stumbled into church.

The main entrance to the new building is on 116th street, and the structure runs back on Third and Washington Avenues to the New York New Haven & Hartford railroad tracks, along which will be the cell-room of the station. There will be cells for 20 men and 10 women. They are to be of steel, well ventilated and up to date in furnishings. Each cell of a modern New York police station contains everything that comfort and health require, and is so cozy that people have been known to seek arrest in preference to going home to their own beds.

Between the station-house and the stable to the left of it will be a court-yard paved with cement and forming an excellent parade ground for the mounted men to form in before sallying forth to duty. A high fence, ornamented, will screen it from the street. The room for turning out the watches is large and marble paved. A quartered oak desk for the sergeant gives it a suggestion of luxury. A large office, with reception room, is also provided for the inspector, another for the captain, and everything that comfort and health can suggest is to be found under the broad roof. The building will be turned over to the police in a couple of months.

Just a teaspoonful of Perry Davis' Painkiller in warm water or milk, taken after exposure to cold or wet will quicken the circulation and thus prevent a chill. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

TOLD BY A FINGER PRINT.

Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 12.--The Syd. ney, New South Wales, courts have just demonstrated the importance of the finger print system as a means of identifying a criminal. A young man charged with burglary has been found guilty in a case where the Crown relied solely upon the evidence of finger-prints. The burglar, in gaining entry to the building, broke the glass of a window and left the impression of his hand in the dust. This was photographed and the exhibit was produced in court. The jury returned a verdict in a few minutes of guilt.

This was the first case of the kind in the Commonwealth. But it was quickly followed by another. The accused, who was charged with breaking and entering, left the impression of his hand on a newly-painted door. This was photographed and found to correspond with an impression of the hand of the prisoner. In this case also a verdict of guilty was quickly reached.

Senior Sergeant Childs, the officer in charge of the finger-print department at Sydney, says he considers the system almost infallible. The cases were watched with the greatest interest by the police, jail and justice department officials.
