FOR LOVE OR HONOR.

As for O'Neill, he made no effort whatever to hide his misery. The impressionable young Irishman had fallen deeply in love with Elizabeth Howard. He had fallen in love a thousand times before, but not in this way, and the breast which had withstood the successful assaults of the brilliant beauties of the gay court of France had literally succumbed at the first sight of this beautiful English girl, whom benignant fortune had thrown across his path.

She, and she only, was his fate, then and thereafter. A new and hitherto unknown feeling had been excited in his heart at the sight of her. In that hour in the boat when he lay with his head upon her knee, when he had looked up at her, heaven had opened before his gaze, and to his disordered fancy she had seemed like an angel. Each passing moment discovered in her a new charm, and he loved her with the impetuosity of a boy, the dotting passion of an old man and the consecration of a devotee.

With the dawning of his race he had not hesitated to tell the girl of his passion, either, although it was stale news to her. There is nothing that a woman discovers more quickly and more surely than the feelings of a man who loves her. That she had laughed at his ardor and not in the least deterred him from persisting in his attentions, which she had not found unwelcome, for he thoroughly understood the value of determined pursuit. She had told him that they were like two ships sailing on the great sea, whose paths happened to cross for a minute. They met, nod to each other, and pass on; the deep swallows them up and they see each other no more forever.

He had vowed and protested that it would not be so; that England was a great country and Lord Westbrooke a great man; that she could not go anywhere without attracting the attention of the world—that she could by no means hide her light; that he would withdraw from the American service, which he could honorably do at the expiration of the present cruise, and search the whole island until he found her—all of which was pleasant for her to hear, of course, although it elicited no more favorable reply. She was attracted to the young man; his handsome person, his cultivated mind, his charming manner was such that no one—no woman—could be indifferent to them; but she did not love him, at least, not yet.

Elizabeth Howard was a woman to make a man fall desperately in love with her, and many men had done so. She was tall and graceful, golden haired, blue eyed and with a noble presence. She was proud, she was wise, she was witty, she was tender, she was contemplative, she was gay, she was sad, she was joyous, in different moods. Days, years even could not tell of the charms of her infinite value, though far down beneath the surface of her nature were the quiet seeds of constancy and devotion—who could discover them? There was about her that indefinable air of one born for homage and command, which speaks of generations to whom have been accorded honor and place unquestioned.

It was not a long row to the land, and as they approached the rugged coast the young lieutenant eagerly scanned the shore for a landing place. Steering around a little promontory which hid them from the Ranger, he discovered a stretch of sandy beach under its lee, and the boat was sent in its direction until it grated on the soft sand. It was a lonely spot, a little stretch of sand ending inland, and on one side in precipitous rocks over which a wandering pathway straggled unevenly to the heights above. The other end of the beach gave entrance through a little opening or pass in the rocks upon a country road which wandered about inland, losing itself under some trees a mile or so away.

On the rocky promontory back of and at one end of the beach, there was a small lighthouse and several miles from the beach in the other direction, at the end of the road probably, was a castle or fort, the flag floating lazily from the staff indicating that it was garrisoned. Springing lightly from the boat O'Neill stepped recklessly in the water alongside. Miss Howard rose to her feet and looked anxiously about her.

"Allow me," said O'Neill and then, without waiting for permission he lifted her gently in his arms and carried her to the shore. "Would that all the earth were water and that I might carry you forever," he said as he laid her down upon the sand.

"You would not like heaven then?" she replied, jesting.

"I find my present experience of it delightful, madam. But why do you say that?" he asked anxiously. "Because there, we are told, there will be no more sea!" she answered with well simulated gaiety.

"Tis a poor place for a sailor, then," he replied gravely, in no mood for badinage, "and I fear that few of them will get there."

Price, who had followed his officer's example with the maid, now stepped up to him for orders, necessarily interrupting the conversation.

"Price," he said, to that intrepid old sailor, "you may go back to the boat and shove off and keep her under lee off that little point until I call you, and keep a sharp lookout."

"Aye, aye, sir," said the old sailor, turning to fulfill the command. "Now, I suppose, the time has come for me to say good-bye to Lieutenant O'Neill," said Elizabeth. "Oh, not yet, Miss Howard. I cannot leave you here alone until I know that you are safe."

"But your duty, sir?"

"A gentleman's, a sailor's first duty is always toward the helpless woman, especially if she is—"

"His prisoner, you would say, I suppose," she said, interrupting hastily. That was not at all what he had intended to say, but he let it pass.

"You know who is prisoner now and forever, Miss Howard?"

"If you refer to Lieutenant O'Neill, I will release him now and forever, as well, at once, sir," she said archly.

"You cannot."

"As you will, sir," she replied, "but as I happen to see several horsemen coming down the road yonder I imagine that you will not be detained from your ship long. Let us go forward to meet them. Perhaps they can give us some information."

The horsemen, evidently an officer and two orderlies who were galloping towards the beach, at the moment noticed the boat party and probably the Ranger itself. They reined in their horses at once and the officer apparently gave some directions to one of the others, for he saluted, turned his horse about in the road and galloped back towards the castle. The officer then trotted hastily forward, followed by the remaining man, and, looking intently ahead of him until he reached the vicinity of the little group, he dismounted and handing the bridle to his soldier, bade him wait where he was.

THE WINTER FAIR.

Eminent Public Men at the Amherst Show Which is a Great Success.

Amherst, N. S., Dec. 5.—The fifth Maritime Winter Fair was duly opened yesterday and was fairly well attended.

At six o'clock the president and directors of the Maritime Stock Breeders' Association, held their annual lunch in the commissioners' rooms. The lunch was served by the ladies of the Hospital Aid Society.

President Elderkin presided, on his right was the Hon. D. A. Mackinnon, lieutenant governor of Prince Edward Island, and on his left the Hon. Sydney Fisher, minister of agriculture, Ottawa. After partaking of the luncheon President Elderkin proposed the toast to the King, Hon. W. T. Pipes proposed the toast to the Governor General of Canada and the Lieutenant Governors of the Maritime Provinces, coupling with the toast the name of Hon. D. A. Mackinnon, of P. E. I., who was present and responded.

H. J. Logan, M. P., proposed the toast Our Country, to which Hon. Sydney Fisher responded. He spoke of the wonderful advances that Canada was making especially along agricultural lines. He spoke of the success which had attended the Maritime Winter Fair since he had the pleasure of assisting in inaugurating it in 1901.

Hon. James Stratton, ex-provincial secretary for Ontario, was present, and also spoke briefly as did Hon. L. P. Farris, commissioner of agriculture for New Brunswick.

Col. H. M. Campbell, of Sussex (N. B.), proposed the toast to the Ladies' Hospital Aid Society, speaking highly of the manner in which they had from year to year discharged their duty providing for the wants of hungry multitudes. He referred to the good work they were doing in maintaining such a grand institution as the hospital.

Mrs. Allan, president of the society, whose name Lieut. Campbell, coupled with the toast, asked Justice Longley, who was present, to respond for her. Mr. Longley did so as only Mr. Longley can.

FAIR FORMALLY OPENED.

At 8 o'clock the formal opening of the fair took place in the large auditorium of the building. President Elderkin presiding. On the platform were Mayor Lowther, Warden J. H. Livingston, Hon. Sidney Fisher, Hon. James Stratton, Hon. L. P. Farris, Hon. D. A. Mackinnon, Col. Campbell, ex-Mayor Rhodes, A. B. Copp, M. P. P., Premier Murray, B. W. Chipman and others.

President Elderkin in opening thanked those present for their attendance and he spoke for all a pleasant time and on behalf of the Maritime Breeders' Association bade them a hearty welcome.

Mayor Lowther, on behalf of the town and Warden Livingston, on behalf of the county, in appropriate addresses bade them welcome.

Hon. Mr. Farris briefly replied, after which the president called upon Hon. D. A. Mackinnon to formally open the exhibition.

Governor Mackinnon expressed the pleasure which it gave him to be present and the honor conferred upon the province of P. E. Island, the smallest, although not the least important of the provinces, in having a representative open so important an exhibition as this promised to be.

Other speakers of the evening were Hon. Sydney Fisher, Hon. Mr. Justice Longley, Premier Murray and Hon. Jas. Stratton.

THE EXHIBITS.

Nearly all the exhibits were on the ground at an early hour, and it was an interesting sight that met the eyes of your correspondent as he visited the different departments and watched the attendants preparing their exhibits before the great public were admitted.

On the lower flat are to be seen representations of nearly all known breeds of cattle, ranging from the calf of a few months to the immense Shorthorn and Hereford ox.

At the end of the lower flat is the space reserved for the dairy test, and here are some of the finest specimens of the dairy cow grouped together as at a provincial exhibition.

On each side of the fat stock are ranged the pigs and sheep, and in each department of these are good exhibits.

On the second floor is the poultry, the largest exhibit since the inauguration of the fair. It is a veritable barn yard chorus.

The fruit and honey are at the west end of the building. The seed exhibit is a new department, and every class is represented. This branch promises to be one of the most important of the fair in the future.

MYSTERIOUS SHOOTING.

British Columbia Girl Killed in New York Hotel.

New York, Dec. 4.—Roy L. Miller, a telephone superintendent in an up-town hotel, early yesterday aroused the occupants of the flat adjoining the one he had occupied in 43rd street for the last three months with Lottie Miller, who he had introduced as his wife. Early yesterday morning he called that some one had been shot. Horace Heddon living in the adjoining apartments, rushed out and followed Miller to the latter's dining room, where the woman, fully clothed, lay unconscious upon the floor. Miller fell on his knees and begged her to speak to him, to tell the visitors she had shot herself, but there was no response. Heddon then hurried out for help. He returned in a few minutes with a policeman and a doctor, and he found the woman dead and Miller gone. A search was failed to locate the man. A general alarm has been sent out for the arrest of Miller.

Neighbors of the Millers heard no quarrel nor did they hear the report of the pistol. There were no signs of a struggle. The woman lay stretched upon the floor her right hand clasped over a wound in her left breast. Her clothing was scorched by the flash of the powder so closely had the revolver been held to her breast. The police, say, however, there was no trace of powder upon the woman's fingers. The pistol lay near the body on the floor, one chamber empty. A search of the woman's effects leads the police to believe that her real name was Miss Nellie Brod and that she came here from British Columbia.

The authorities believe that it was in a quarrel about her going back to her home that the shooting occurred.

Many a man has declined to follow a brass band down the street because he didn't have a gun.

FIFTY CENTS

IN some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion is very rapid. For this reason we put up a fifty-cent size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children. In other conditions the gain is slower—health cannot be built up in a day. In such cases Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment; a food rather than a medicine. It's a food for tired and weak digestions.

The Wornout Nerves, The Weak Heart, The Tired Brain, The Wasted Strength.

What a multitude of women there are who feel that these words exactly suit their case. From early morn until late at night they have been on the go, year in and year out, attending to the daily household duties, looking after the wants of her children and spending the rest of her time attending to social and church work. Is it any wonder then that sooner or later there comes a general collapse? The action of the heart becomes weak and palpitating, the nerves become unstrung, the brain feels in a whirl half the time and the usual force of vitality is lacking.

It is at this time a woman should look after herself. If she does not, serious female disorders may set in and often cause weary months and years of helplessness and miserable suffering. What she wants is something to build up her system. For this purpose there is nothing so equal

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

They are the women's friend in every sense of the word.

They will strengthen the weak heart, tone up the shabby, starved nerves, make the brain clear, and restore the lost vitality.

Mrs. George Lohnes, Stanley Section, N.S., writes: "I was greatly troubled with weak and dizzy spells and was so run down I could not attend to my household duties. I bought two boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and after taking them I found that my trouble had all passed away. I am now strong and healthy again."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25. If your dealer does not handle them, send direct to The Milburn Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.
