CHARLOTTETOWN PRISONERS.

Organized Plot to Overcome Jailer and make their Escape.

Charlottetown, Nov. 16.—(Special)—A plot formulated by a number of prisoners in the Queen's county jail, to make their escape by an attack on the jailer, Mr. Hamilt, and attendants, was discovered in time to prevent its execution.

The prisoners in the plot were Geo. Lowder, Isadore Peters, and Joseph McAlister, who are in jail awaiting trial at the January term of the Supreme court.

Lowder and McAlister are charged with having stolen horses, etc., throughout the province several months ago, and Peters for larceny of goods of the Wedlock Brothers, of St. Anley Bridge.

The three prisoners were confined in the same room during the day, but at night slept in adjoining cells. Lowder had been threatening and his movements were closely watched by the jailer and assistants.

Several days ago a stone hammer used in breaking coal in the cellar was missed and discovered under Lowder's bed. It is thought he had taken it there concealed in a scuttle of coal.

What the result would have been had Lowder been able to put into execution the plan he thought out, no one can tell. He would easily have been able to make an attack with an ugly weapon on the jailer, if the latter had been taken unawares and the entire lot might have escaped.

As a result of the discovery of the plot application will be made to the jail commissioners to have Lowder, and probably Peters placed in irons during the remainder of their period of imprisonment.

"COWARD, PUMPKIN HEAD."

What Presbyterian Minister Called a Town Marshal.

Chillicothe, O., Nov. 16.—(Special)—The village of Frankford is excited over the sensational encounter between Rev. Mr. Wilson of the Presbyterian church and Strawder McNeal, who is the marshal of the place.

Frankford is a dry town, but there has been a great deal of whisky and beer imported, and in the pulp it. The pastor referred to the marshal as a pumpkin-head and a coward for failing to do his duty, and the marshal, who was present, jumped from his seat and called the pastor a liar.

A riot was imminent, but the marshal left the church without trouble. Next morning the two men met in front of the postoffice and the marshal slapped the minister's face. By-standers interfered and there were no arrests.

Rev. William Wilson is a Hamilton man. For years he was employed in the wholesale warehouse of Wood, Vallance & Company, there. He was a diligent student, however, and qualified for the ministry. He has always been an active temperance worker and very outspoken in denunciation of violation of the law. He has been pastor of the Presbyterian church at Frankford for quite a number of years.

SALVATION ARMY WORK.

Commissioner Coombs Addresses Stirring Words to Local Salvationists.

Montreal, Nov. 14.—The new Salvation Army citadel at the corner of University Avenue and Cathcart St., was filled to the doors last night to hear Commissioner Coombs, head of the Salvation Army movement in Canada, address the Montreal branch on the work of the army. Over six hundred persons were present and the meeting over which Major G. W. Stephens presided, was a thoroughly representative and enthusiastic one.

In introducing the Major, Brigadier Turner paid the memory of the late Mr. Stephens a glowing tribute for his earnest interest in the work of the followers of General Booth in this country, and remarked that the Army was fortunate in securing the popular M. L. A. to fill the chair. He "took after his father," said Brigadier Turner, amid much applause.

Major Stephens in turn introduced Rev. Dr. Shaw, principal of the Diocesan Theological College, who paid the Salvationists the high compliment of saying that no matter to what height of political favor the gallant major might rise in military, social or political circles, he could never hope for a better recognition of his worth than being chairman of the meeting on that occasion. Dr. Shaw spoke of the good work done by the Army in lifting up fallen humanity, the best work that any organization could hope to do.

Mr. J. C. Holden followed with a few congratulatory remarks on the local branch's new building, and expressed surprise at the largeness of the Army; it was in all parts of the world. "I was once in a far distant part of Canada," he said, "fully one thousand miles north of Vancouver, B. C., and there we for I was in a party—found the Army. There were only eight of us all told, and so we took up a collection."

Upon rising to speak the Commissioner was greeted with a splendid and loving ovation, lasting quite three minutes or more. He looked better and brighter than ever before, and was in a most happy vein; and in his opening remarks said that while he had frequently visited Canada in the last twenty-one years, "no visit pleased him so much as this. He had just come from Newfoundland where he had been engaged in pioneer work. Most of his time had been spent in England and Australia, but he was convinced that the Army's strength lay in its practical work. They recognized the fact that man had a body as well as a soul; they fed that body and fitted up the soul to better ideals. "We make them happy in the stomach," he said, laughing. "We apply a beefsteak plaster—and it always works."

The Army always has had difficulties, he continued, it had one right in the new barracks, where $30,000 was needed to pay off the $52,000 cost of construction. He wished that some insurance funds that seemed to be flying about the country would come the way of the local branch. "We can always accommodate those people," he smiled.

Last year the Commissioner had brought over to Canada 5,000 emigrants from Great Britain, and out of the number only five per cent. belonged to the army, but were all desirable people, and would make the best of citizens.

A few incidents were related of the glorious work the Army was doing along social lines and the speaker wished those who did not know the Salvationists to take off their green spectacles, not like the old man, "to go into a butcher shop with green glasses on his face and ask if sausages were cucumbers." If one wished to know the Army and its work, one should go to the Army and find out.

The early days of the organization, when the soldiers were openly insulted, and could not get tailors to make their uniforms, were contrasted with the present days, when Gen. Booth was a welcome guest at the table of Royalty and made the honored recipient of the freedom of London, in which city the Army began. General Booth had been presented with an oaken box, made from the timbers of Guildhall; and the sovereign's usual upon such a ceremony were given to the poor.

Referring to the spread of the Army work, Commissioner Coombs said that Japan and Russia—unfortunate Russia—were golden fields of labor. Japan, whither General Booth was about to go, was a marvelous opportunity for good, in fact the branch there had gained much in strength. The Japanese translation of the Bible, by the Army, was the best book in the Land of the Cherry Blossom, and the most popular.

Finland, too, was going on rapidly with the Salvation Army, and the cry was "more men—more men." The Commissioner closed with a strong appeal to the young people of Canada to devote their talents to good works, within the Army if possible.

Among those on the platform were Messrs. J. M. M. Duff, John Drysdale and all the members of the local branch.

During the evening Brigadier Turner and Pugmire contributed solos, one by the latter "Tell Mother Be There," proving an especially where he had been engaged in pioneer

WHERE LAWYERS DIFFER.

Chief Justice Tuck Compares the Proceedings in the Cushing Case to a Bear Garden.

Wednesday was one of the busiest and most exciting days the supreme court has experienced for a month of Sundays. The case of the Cushing Sulphite Fibre Company was up for argument with six of the ablest lawyers the province can boast of representing the opposing interests.

Messrs. A. O. Earle, K. C., H. A. Powell, K. C., and M. G. Teed, K. C., supported the appeal from the order of Judge McLeod postponing the sale of the mill property under the winding up act until May 1st. The attorney general and Messrs. L. A. Curvey, and A. P. Barnhill, K. C.'s, opposed the appeal, and at the same time argued against an order of the chief justice staying the order of Judge McLeod.

When giants like the attorney general and Mr. Powell happen to have opposite sides in a case, they are very liable to warm things up a bit, and they certainly did that Wednesday. They were actively abetted by Mr. Justice Hanington, who butted into the debate quite frequently just to impress the court and counsel with the fact that he was opposed to the action taken by Judge McLeod in granting the order. An expression of opinion by Judge Hanington was usually followed by one equally as emphatic from Mr. Justice McLeod, and there was not much harmony in their views to say the least. On several occasions the counsel were obliged to take a breathing spell to give the two learned judges a chance to thresh out a disputed point. Justice Hanington became considerably warmed up over the case and stated very emphatically that he believed to be right, regardless of what any judge or counsel might say or think.

Repeated brushes between Justice McLeod and the attorney general on the one side and Justice Hanington on the other, finally led the chief justice to enquire of the attorney general if he had ever attended a performance at the York Theatre.

The Attorney General answered in the affirmative.

The Chief Justice—Does not this remind you of one of those performances? Don't you think we have had something approaching a bear garden here today?

Judge Hanington—You ought to keep better order.

The attorney general expressed the opinion that his learned friend, Mr. Powell, who had a great command of language, had been very aggravating in his remarks.

The Chief Justice—I will say for you Mr. Attorney, that I consider you one of the most mild mannered men in the province.

The Attorney General—I am pleased to have that slight testimony from your honor.

The chief justice went on to say that while the attorney general did not deal sledge hammer blows at his opponents he made use of rapier thrusts which were quite as effective. With so many interruptions the attorney general found progress rather slow and had not concluded his argument when the court adjourned at 5:30 o'clock.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY EXECUTIVE.

Important Meeting Held This Morning—Dates for Next Exhibition.

A special meeting of the directors of Agricultural society for district No. 34 was held at the office of the Sec'y., Mr. W. S. Hooper, this morning. Vice-president Robinson presided, the others present being Messrs. William McKay, A. D. Thomas, J. R. Golding, J. W. McCready, M. Tennant, W. E. Farrell, G. Y. Dil-blee and the secretary.

In the matter of the dates for the 1907 exhibition, it was found that a slight error had been made in the same, and it was promptly rectified. The exhibition will open on Monday, September 23, and close on Saturday, the 29th. There is some talk of having the formal opening Saturday night, but nothing definite has yet been decided upon.

On account of there being a few small bills due the society as well as a few outstanding, no statement in connection with the finances of the recent exhibition was submitted to the meeting. It was decided to positively close the accounts on the 20th inst., and have a full statement ready for the annual meeting, which is to be held in the council chamber on the afternoon of November 30th.

It is generally understood that when full returns are in accounts will show a small surplus on the right side of the ledger.

The audit committee was authorized to employ auditors not connected with the society to make a thorough audit of the accounts. Being a public body, the executive feel that it is only right that an audit should be made that will be satisfactory to all.

PRINCE AND PRESSMEN.

They Were Sleepy But His Serene Highness Was Alert ---Questions Cheerfully Answered.

Brooklyn Eagle: That Prince Louis of Battenberg is well capable of going through such a campaign of gaiety as he is now enjoying was shown Tuesday morning when he came on the deck of his flagship, the Drake, at the Cunard pier, in Manhattan, to talk to the newspaper men, a few minutes before leaving for Tuxedo, to be entertained there at luncheon.

Most of his interviewers were sleepy and yawning, for they had been following him about day and night, including the Coney Island International jamboree, and they were not in the highest spirits. But the Prince-Admiral was as chipper as could be, and showed not a trace of his long day and night of varied events which his presence graced. He wore a long grey overcoat and a derby hat, this being the first time the reporters who have interviewed him in the morning have found him in civilian dress.

"Aren't you tired?" asked the spokesman of the group, suppressing a yawn as he asked the question.

"Not a bit," said Prince Louis, heartily, and he smiled, for the state of his interviewers was not lost to him. He seemed to think their condition very funny, and his eyes twinkled as he saw the reporters trying to suppress their ready yawns in his presence.

The Prince was glowing in his admiration of the Horse Show, which he saw Monday night.

"It was wonderful," he said, "such beautiful women and such magnificent gowns." Then he added, with a smile, "but sometime before the end of my visit, I am going to try to get an afternoon off and see the horses."

Then the Prince had to hurry away with his staff for Tuxedo to take luncheon with Mrs. Pell. He went to the Twenty-third street ferry in a carriage and took a ferry-boat across to the Erie Railroad depot. The passengers on the boat quickly recognized him, and stared at him curiously all the way over to Jersey.

MEMORY OF PIONEERS.

To Be Perpetuated at Belfast, P. E. I.

Charlottetown, Nov. 16.—(Special)—There arrived here this morning from New Glasgow, N. S., a stone monument to be erected at Belfast in memory of the arrival of Scottish immigrants who came to this island in Lord Selkirk's ship, August, 1803, and made homes themselves and their descendants who reside at Belfast.

"I can't imagine what you were thinking of to let your uncle beat you so badly."

"I was thinking of a codicil."
