TENNIS.

MISS MAY SUTTON AND TENNIS.

English tennis critics are still writing of the marvelous playing of Miss May Sutton, the California girl, in the world's tennis championships, which she won. Not until Miss Sutton came up with a rush through the difficult preliminaries did the English tennis-loving public gathered at Wimbledon, London, pay any attention to the extremely young American champion who had come to attempt what no other American woman had accomplished. As one after another of the experts were disposed of easily the English players opened their eyes wider, so that when it finally settled down to Miss Sutton as the one to meet Miss Douglass, world champion, she was the centre of attraction. This, from the London Chronicle, probably voices the English impression of the girl who, to the astonishment of the spectators, easily conquered the heretofore unvanquished Miss Douglass.

"There is no mistaking her on the courts, for she is in herself a remarkable personality. Alibost starting at first glance is her appearance. In England, strenuous though our ladies are nowadays over the game, there is still a certain amount of concession to fancy in the way of blouses and shoes and ties and waistbands and such things. Some ladies, indeed, have even gone so far during the week as to adventure their chance for the championship beneath a really pretty sunbonnet, Miss Sutton faces her opponents in a plain white sort of washerwoman's blouse, without a collar without a tie, without cuffs, with no appearance of a waistband; with a short 'three-quarter' skirt, black stockings, and low white shoes—in short, with really no ornament at all save a pink ribbon tying up her bonny brown hair at the back, as though to keep it out of the way. Costumed for the work before her she goes upon the courts with an air of serene confidence that is quite refreshing. Quick as a cat, she possesses the eye of an eagle and is imbued with the determination that makes athletic champions. Her endurance is phenomenal. Magnificently muscular, she appears to care nothing for the minor graces, not even the little tricks and dodges in which her male compatriots delight. She is all for the rigor of the game. There is no tripping after the ball with her, no showing off of her figure at the net. She just stands, near the base-line for the most part, and sends the ball over the net in terrific drives. Yet, with it all, there is nothing offensively masculine about her. She gives one the impression of being just a fine, strong, healthy, athletic American girl.

THE RING.

MOST FIGHTERS DIE POOR.

A glance at the careers of the great ring gladiators of the past proves the truth of the assertion that fighters, no matter what money they may have accumulated during the period of their success, generally die penniless. Not only the fickle jade, Fortune ceased to smile upon them toward the termination of life's journey, but their last hours were often embittered by the desertion of friends and patrons, who were willing to pay tribute to brawn when the sun of success shone upon its effort and add glory followed in its wake.

Yes, destitution and despair have marked the culminating period of most fighters' lives, and frequently the element of tragedy entered into it. Who does not remember the sad ending of Ned O'Baldwin, the Irish Giant, the Clever Titan whom Jim Mac, the "wizard of the prize ring," was afraid to battle for the world's championship.

O'Baldwin was deliberately murdered in a New York dive by a man who had once been his friend and the recipient of his bounty—shot in the back by a coward who dares not face him, even with a "gun" in his hand. O'Baldwin would have been buried in the Potter's field had not kind-hearted sportsmen subscribed to give his poor body a Christian interment. The fate of "Yankee Sullivan," the greatest fighter of his weight and inches in his day and generation is frequently recalled by war worn veterans who followed the prize ring fifty years ago.

Sullivan, whose real name was Frank Ambrose Murray, after his successive defeats at the hands of Tom Hyer and John Morrissey, sought to mend his fortune in that section where "the star of empire" lay.

He migrated to California toward the waning days of the gold fever. The famous vigilance committee of San Francisco was then in existence and ruled the embryo municipality with an iron hand. "Yankee," being a fighter, was arrested as a suspicious character and hurried into prison.

A few nights after his incarceration he was murdered in his cell while the resisting with might and main the fate his captors had endeavored to meet out to him. Sullivan had been suspected of an alliance with a gang of burglars then operating on the Pacific slope, but no proof of his guilt was adduced at the time.

It is a matter of history with which many people of the past generation, but few of the present, are familiar, how Bill Poole, the "king of the rough and tumble fighters," met his fate.

Poole and Tom Hyer were recognized as leaders of the American or "Know-Nothing" faction, which dominated New York from 1850 to 1855, and were unrelenting in their opposition to the influx upon American soil of foreigners whose political power they had begun to dread.

Pugilist John Morrissey, in after years State Senator, Congressman and prince of gamblers, was the leader of the element opposed to Poole. A fistie battle naturally followed.

The principals agreed to meet at the foot of Amos street dock, with but one attendant each. Morrissey kept his word but Poole violated his. Morrissey was accompanied by his trusted friend and lieutenant, Johnny Lyons, while Poole had a retinue of 300 followers. Morrissey was fearfully pummeled by the mob, and barely escaped with his life. This was on the morning of July 27, 1854.

The friends of Morrissey swore vengeance. The opportunity came on the night of February 24, 1855. Poole was standing at the bar of the Stanwix Hall, No. 579 Broadway, when Lew Baker, Charley Van Pelt, Cornelius Lyon and John Hyler entered the place and forthwith picked a quarrel with him. Pistols were drawn, and in the melee which followed Poole was shot in the left breast just below the nipple. He lingered in great agony for nine days. His murderers escaped unpunished.

Among other pugilists who have met with an untimely end were John P. Clow, champion of the Northwest, who was shot through the heart in a bar-room row by Officer F. C. Marshall at Denver, Col., on December 9, 1890, and George Fulljames, ex-lightweight champion of America, who was murdered a few years ago at the ringside in Manitoba while battling with an unknown pugilist.

GRAND CIRCUIT RACES.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Aug. 21.—The Grand Circuit meeting at the Hudson Driving Park was concluded Saturday with three finely contested races. The 2.10 pace was won by the favorite, Peruna, which sold for twenty-five dollars in the pools, in which Stein and E. Geers each brought ten dollars, Elmwood, five dollars and the field thirteen dollars. Although the finishes were all close, the favorite won in straight heats.

In the 2.15 trot the talent was unable to pick a favorite before the first heat, and Swift B. and Thorn Boy each brought fifty dollars, with the Swago selling for twenty dollars, and the field for fifteen dollars. Swift B. outclassed the field and made it a straight heat affair handily. The other favorites had difficulty in getting into the money, while Harry J. and Kinstress, having equal scores, divided second and third.

The 2.10 trot had the bettors guessing all the time. The opening pools made Clarita W. favorite at fifty dollars to thirteen dollars for the field. The Roman took the first, with Clarita W. sixth, notwithstanding which the mare continued favorite at reduced odds. This was largely because Geers was driving. In the second that, which went to Robert Mc. the favorite was a good second. Geers withdrew the horse after the heat because of lameness. Jim Ferry won next heat and showed such superior staying qualities that he was made favorite and won the fourth heat and race in a close finish with Topsy, the Roman Robert Mc. dividing second and third.

CELEBRATED STALLION DEAD.

The well known stallion Black Pilot, famous ten or fifteen years ago in racing circles, especially in P. E. Island, has been chloroformed. He was twenty-three years old and had been owned for some years by E. Steeves of Moncton.

THE HAPPINESS OF HOME.

Very largely depends on the mother's disposition; if she is animated and bright, everyone is happy; but if she is nervous, irritable and cross — everything goes wrong. Bright cheery women usually use Ferrozone, the greatest health-maker known. By acting through the blood Ferrozone is able to reach all the organs that need assistance; it establishes the regular and healthy actions of all functions, builds up the general health, fortifies the system with a reserve of energy that defies disease. Don't put off—Ferrozone costs only 50 cents at any drug store; get it today.

ABERDEEN ON CANADIAN MILITIA.

London, Aug. 22.—Lord Aberdeen, in opening a volunteer bazaar at Inverness, in Scotland, in referring to the proposal to adopt conscription in Great Britain, said: "It may be out of place to allude to the types of the citizen army in our colonies, especially in Canada. No doubt the organization of the Canadian forces correspond in some respects more to that of the militia, but the membership of the force is very similar to that of our volunteer in this country, and possesses that adaptability which you will find in a semi-civilian force which is of so much value."
