New York, Aug. 21.—(Special)—A. Turin, Italy, despatch to the Herald says that recently an attempt was made to assassinate Queen Marguerita, mother of King Victor Emmanuel, who is making a tour of Italy in an automobile.

This news was contained in a telegram received at the Royal Palace. The Queen was ascending Little St. Bernard in her automobile, accompanied by the Marquis De Villamina and another lady of the court and two gentlemen, when the machine suddenly struck against a stone wall that had been erected in the middle of the road and overturned.

Fortunately no one was injured, but the five occupants were greatly alarmed.

The barricade had been placed at a dangerous turning where it was impossible to see the road more than a few feet in advance.

HIS END WAS PEACE.

Senator Wark Passed Away at His Home Sunday Morning.

HAD BEEN IN FAILING HEALTH FOR FIVE WEEKS.

Was Free From Pain and Perfectly Rational Till the Last.

FUNERAL WILL BE SIMPLE IN CHARACTER IN KEEPING WITH WISHES OF DECEASED.

Hon. David Wark, Fredericton's oldest citizen, and the world's oldest parliamentarian, is no more, his soul having passed to the great beyond at 8.40 o'clock on Sunday morning.

The sad news spread quickly about the city, and created considerable surprise and comment, for the serious nature of his illness was not generally known outside of his household. On all sides expressions of regret were heard that Fredericton's most distinguished and honored citizen had been called away.

The late Senator Wark was taken ill about five weeks ago, and although he suffered no pain, it soon became evident to Dr. Crockett, the family physician, that he was nearing the close of his long and useful career. His illness was due to the infirmities of extreme old age, and there was a gradual breaking up of the whole system. Asked by his physician a short time ago as to his condition the Senator replied: "I have no pain or ache, but am only waiting to be gathered in." Although conscious that the end was drawing near, he maintained a cheerful disposition, and continued to interest himself in all that was going on. He wrote a number of letters by dictation, the last one being written on the day preceding his death.

Dr. Crockett has been in daily attendance upon the distinguished patient for a period of five weeks, and early last week his pastor and friend, Rev. Willard Macdonald, was called home from Windsor, N. S., that he might be near at hand in case the worst should come to pass. At an early hour on Sunday morning the patient took a turn for the worse, and about seven o'clock Dr. Crockett arrived and remained until the dissolution came. The patient retained consciousness right up to the last moment, though the power of speech deserted him some hours before his death. Several times during the night and again at 7.30 o'clock Sunday morning, he tried to speak to those in the room with him, but his words were inaudible. At exactly 8.40 o'clock, he closed his eyes and entered peacefully upon the great sleep which knows no awakening. Those who were at the bedside when the end came were his daughter, Miss Helena Wark, Miss Coburn, Rev. Willard Macdonald, Dr. Crockett, and Miss Stalker of Ottawa, an intimate friend of the family.

The Herald learns that on Sunday, August 13th, one week before his death, Senator Wark expressed a wish that he might then be called away. He said he wanted to leave the world on the glorious Sabbath day, and towards evening, he is said to have expressed disappointment that God had not called him home. On Saturday afternoon last, Rev. Mr. Macdonald, at the Senator's request, offered prayers for his speedy departure to the better land. Prayers were also offered for the members of the Wark household and all of God's children. At the conclusion of prayers three of the Senator's favorite hymns were sung.

From a member of Senator Wark's household, the Herald learns that the deceased was perfectly rational up to the time of his death, and was able to recognize those around him. He chatted quite freely up to five o'clock in the morning, and after that hour, although he spoke several times, he could not make himself understood. His breathing became heavier as the few hours that remained to him went by, but there was not the slightest indication of suffering.

Some time before his death the Senator calmly talked over matters in connection with his funeral, and requested that it should be of the simplest character, and without flowers. His wishes will be carried out as far as possible.

At St. Paul's church on Sunday evening, the preacher, Rev. J. R. Kerr, announced the death of Senator Wark and offered prayers for the members of the family. It was also announced that the Kirk picnic, to have been held at Taylorstown, tomorrow, had been postponed on account of Senator Wark's death.

The flags on the city and government buildings are flying at half-mast today out of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday afternoon, Rev. Willard Macdonald officiating. Services will be conducted at the house, commencing at 2.30 o'clock, and the procession will start at three. Interment will be made in the family lot in Forest Hill cemetery. Undertaker John G. Adams will be funeral director.

OTTAWA, Aug. 21.—The flag on the main tower of the parliament building was run up at half-mast Sunday upon receipt of the news that Senator Wark had died Sunday morning at his home in Fredericton, N. B.

REBELLION OF 1837.

Mr. Charles Ferdinand Durand, one of the most interesting pioneers of Ontario, died at his residence, Toronto, 137 Huron street, Thursday afternoon, in his ninety-fifth year.

The late Mr. Durand was born near Hamilton on April 4th, 1811, the son of James D. Durand, who was a Commander of Militia during 1812, and a member of the Legislature of Upper Canada for Wentworth and Halton during Sir John Colborne's administration. The son went to school near Dundas in 1829 studied law in the office of Mr. Robert Berrie Hamilton, and in 1835 was admitted to the bar. In his student days, in fact throughout his early life, he was a frequent contributor to the local press, his communications in the thirties being for the most part vigorous denunciations of the Family Compact and its methods.

Soon after the rebellion of 1837 broke out he was in Toronto on business, and while returning to Hamilton was arrested at Streetsville as an active supporter of the outbreak.

In his opinion this action was the result of the malignity of personal enemies, Mr. Allan MacNab in particular. He was escorted back to Toronto and was confined with the other political prisoners in the prison on Toronto street opposite the Deputy Receiver General's Office, Captain McGrath being the goaler. In two small rooms they cooked their meals, and while returning to Hamilton received provisions from their wives and friends on the outside, and read news from home cunningly concealed in puddings, pies and poultry. Mr. Durand's wife at that time was only seventeen years old and was arrested at one time while on her way from Hamilton to Toronto to see her husband. Soon after her release he fell a victim to the jail fever, and lay among smallpox victims, where his wife, notwithstanding the danger, came to visit him. Her brother also visited him and contracted the smallpox.

In the following year Mr. Durand was brought to trial before a jury presided over by Sir John Beverley Robinson and Mr. Justice C. A. Hagerman and notwithstanding his emphatic denial of the charge that he had conspired and conspired with divers unknown persons for the overthrow of the Government and for the purpose of securing arms, he was found guilty of high treason and sentenced to be hanged. Mr. Durand admitted shaking hands with William Lyon Mackenzie, but this was done simply because he had known the rebel leader for some years.

Subsequently a petition was largely signed, praying for the commutation of the death sentence, and as a result the Department of Justice ordered his property to be confiscated, in lieu of the death penalty. He took up residence in Chicago, and six years afterward received a pardon. He then returned to Toronto and opened a law office in 1844, next door to the present site of Webb's restaurant. He built up a lucrative law practice and was afterwards appointed to a public position by the Sanfield Macdonald government of Ontario.
