FOR LOVE OR HONOR

They looked apart, and heard above the voice of the great deep, the unfathomable sound of the moaning surge far beneath them, chafing against the pebbles in the still morning, the wild beating of their hearts. After a little pause he continued, softly:

"And you—you will forget the young Irishman, the soldier of fortune, whom untoward fate threw across your pathway, and in your English home and in the love of your noble husband may you be happy?"

"Nay, not so," she said softly, taking his hand again, her eyes filling with tears—this time she was stronger. "My heart is not made of such fickle stuff. I shall do my duty, keep my plighted word—even you would have me do no less than that—but not more steadfastly than I shall keep you within my memory. But do not talk of death; you must not. I know the Admiral—he has a kindly heart."

"I would not live," replied the young man quietly. "For life is death where the heart is dead."

"Tell me," said the girl, breaking the almost insupportable silence, "where were you when my mother's picture fell last night?"

"So near that it almost fell into my arms," he answered smiling. "A bad omen!" she murmured, shaking her head.

"What! That it should fall into my arms?"

"No, that it should fall at all."

"Well, I do not believe in omens, and 'tis in the arms of another that you fall, at any rate. He gets the substance, I the shadow, the illusion—and even that is broken!"

"And so even the shadow is lost," said Elizabeth.

"Not yet. Open my heart, you will find it there," he answered quickly. "But how like you the portrait was!"

"Yes, I am said to look like my mother," she said, striving, as we all do, in fragile moments, to reach the height of the commonplace. "In the dress that I now wear, under the changing fashions, the likeness is not so striking, but when I am gowned as she was, in that identical costume, which is still in existence, by the way, and sit as she did, in the dim light in that old chair, the resemblance is even more striking."

"Would that I could see you thus—in that dress of the olden times! Nothing except your actual presence in the hall has ever startled me so much as that image of the past did last night. You are so like the picture, but more beautiful, I think."

"Ah, yes; youth and the present are always the more beautiful. The Admiral says that I am not to be mentioned beside her. He loved her, I think. She was his cousin. They tell me that they married very young unhappily, too, and died when I was born, many years after. My father, too, died. I can scarcely remember him at all. I am alone."

"There should be a warning in this—should there not?" he asked softly—an idle question that fate had determined.

"I suppose so," replied the girl, wearily. "But what was I to do? The arrangement was made when I was a child. I have grown up with Edward Coventry. He loves me, he is a noble fellow. I respect, esteem him highly. It is a long cherished wish of the Admiral's. It was my mother's wish as well. I put him off in spite of the engagement for a year—for six months again," she said, with a glance of fond reproach that cut him to the heart.

"I am not on my word of honor if he would only wait that time I would make no further objections. I cannot break that word now."

"Not even for me?"

"No, not even for you."

"But you do not love him?" he asked, eagerly.

"Yes," she answered softly. "I do—in a way, that is."

"But not like—"

"Enough, Lieutenant O'Neill," she answered proudly, resuming, "for once, her erstwhile haughty mother, which was belied by a deep blush on her cheeks. 'Tis not generous of you to press me further. I—we have decided. I can stand no more. Forgive me—have mercy!"

"I respect your decision; nay, more I honor you for it, Lady Elizabeth," he answered, smiling gravely. "I kiss your hand and go to my death smiling. Forget me."

"Your death!" she cried in alarm.

"What mean you?"

"The Admiral, sir, would speak with you in the office at once," interrupted the sergeant, who had approached with a file of soldiers.

"You see—the summons," replied O'Neill, calmly, to Elizabeth. "Friend I attend you—goodbye."

CHAPTER XL

O'Neill Will Keep His Honor.

The Admiral had fully matured his plans during the night and was fully prepared to make his assault upon the fortifications of O'Neill's honor at the most convenient season. In order to have a clear field for his operations, he had despatched his son upon an errand that would necessitate his absence until the evening. It had been with his full knowledge that his captive had been allowed to meet and converse with his ward. He trusted more to the fascinations of that young woman to effect his end than to any other known agency, in fact.

Beauty and affection, when allied

More terrible Than War!

More terrible than war, famine or pestilence is that awful destroyer, that hydra-headed monster, Consumption, that annually sweeps away more of earth's inhabitants than any other single disease known to the human race.

"It is only a cold, a trifling cough," say the careless, as the irritation upon the delicate mucous membrane causes them to hack away with an irritating tickling of the throat. When the irritation settles on the mucous surface of the throat, a cough is the result. To prevent Bronchitis or Consumption of the Lungs, do not neglect a cough however slight as the irritation spreading throughout the delicate lining of the sensitive air passages soon leads to fatal results. If on the first appearance of a cough or cold you would take a few doses of you would save yourself a great deal of unnecessary suffering. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the life-giving properties of the pine trees of Norway, and for Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough and all Throat and Lung affections it is a specific. Be sure when you ask for Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to get it. Don't be humbugged into taking something else.

Miss Lena Johnston, Toledo, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup for throat troubles after taking numerous other remedies, and I must say that nothing can take the place of it. I would not be without a bottle of it in the house."

have ever been most potent weapons, even when used to promote the cause of treachery and dishonor. Not that the Admiral himself would have done anything that he considered dishonorable. He would rather have cut off his right hand, which had done such stout service for his king; he would sacrifice his life, his son's life, anything, rather than jeopard it, but he would not hesitate to cajole the Irishman to betray his leader if he could. Though he would despise him if he succeeded to the terms that he would propose, yet he would not refrain from making use of him even to his own undoing, if possible. It was the custom of war, and the obloquy which in similar instances has never been heaped upon the tempted has not seemed to attach itself to the tempter under such conditions.

Still, the Admiral did not rejoice in the situation, and he could not make up his mind just how it was necessary to make the offer. He had a rather uncomfortable feeling that he could go so far and then not succeed after all. Yet the greatness of the stake for which he played, he thought, would justify his action, for the person of John Paul Jones was more coveted than that of any other man who had ever warred against the English flag. The governor had under his command two excellent frigates—the Scorpion, forty-eight, and the Scarborough, twenty-eight—and if, through his planning and foresight, they should capture Jones and his ships, he might aspire to any honor in the gift of the King.
