BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

(Richard Greaves)

Copyright, 1904, by Herbert S. Stone & Company

Compared with his former self Monty was now almost a physical wreck, haggard, thin and defiant, a shadow of the once debonair young New Yorker, an object of pity and scorn. Ashamed and despairing, he had almost lacked the courage to face Mrs. Gray. The consolation he once gained through her he now denied himself, and his suffering, peculiar as it was, was very real. In absolute recklessness he gave dinner after dinner, party after party, all on a most lavish scale, many of his guests laughing at him openly while they enjoyed his hospitality. The real friends remonstrated, pleaded, did everything within their power to check his awful rush to poverty, but without success. He was not to be stopped.

At last the furniture began to go, then the plate, then all the priceless bric-a-brac. Piece by piece it disappeared until the apartments were empty and he had squandered almost all of the $40,350 arising from the sales. The servants were paid off, the apartments relinquished, and he was beginning to know what it meant to be "on his uppers." At the banks he ascertained that the interest on his moneys amounted to $19,140.86. A week before the 23d of September the whole million was gone, including the amounts won in Lumber and Fuel and other luckless enterprises. He still had about $17,000 of his interest money in the banks, but he had a billion pangs in his heart—the interest on his improvidence.

He found some delight in the discovery that the servants had robbed him of not less than $3,500 worth of his belongings, including the Christmas presents that he in honor could not have sold. His only encouragement came from Grant & Ripley, the lawyers. They inspired confidence in his lagging brain by urging him on to the end, promising brightness thereafter. Swearengen Jones was as mute as the mountains in which he lived. There was no word from him. There was no assurance that he would approve of what had been done to obliterate Edwin Peter Brewster's legacy.

Dan DeMille and his wife implored Monty to come with them to the mountains before his substance was gone completely. The former offered him money, employment, rest and security if he would abandon the course he was pursuing. Up in Fortieth street Peggy Gray was grieving her heart out, and he knew it. Two or three of those whom he had considered friends refused to recognize him in the street in this last trying week, and it did not even interest him to learn that Miss Barbara Drew was to become a duchess before the winter was gone. Yet he found some satisfaction in the report that one Hampton of Chicago had long since been dropped out of the race.

One day he implored the faithful Bragdon to steal the Boston terriers. He could not and would not sell them, and he dared not give them away. Bragdon dejectedly appropriated the dogs, and Brewster announced that some day he would offer a reward for their return and "no questions asked."

He took a suit of rooms in a small hotel and was feverishly planning the overthrow of the last torturing thousands. Bragdon lived with him, and the Little Sons of the Rich stood loyally ready to help him when he uttered the first cry of want. But even this establishment had to be abandoned at last. The old rooms in Fortieth street were still open to him, and, though he quailed at the thought of making them a refuge, he faced the ordeal in the spirit of a martyr.

CHAPTER XXX.

"MONTY, you are breaking my heart," was the first and only appeal Mrs. Gray ever made to him.' It was two days before the 23d, and it did not come until after the secondhand store men had driven away from her door with the bulk of his clothing in their wagon. She and Peggy had seen little of Brewster, and his nervous restlessness alarmed them. His return was the talk of the town. Men tried to shun him, but he persistently wasted some portion of his fortune on his unwilling subjects. When he gave $5,000 in cash to a home for newsboys even his friends jumped to the conclusion that he was mad. It was his only gift to charity, and he excused his motive in giving at this time by recalling Sedgwick's injunction to "give sparingly to charity." Everything was gone from his thoughts but the overpowering eagerness to get rid of a few troublesome thousands. He felt like an outcast, a pariah, a hated object that infected every one with whom he came in contact. Sleep was almost impossible; eating was a farce. He gave elaborate suppers which he did not touch. Already his best friends were discussing the advisability of putting him in a sanitarium, where his mind might be preserved. His case was looked upon as peculiar in the history of mankind. No writer could find a parallel; no one could imagine a comparison.

Mrs. Gray met him in the hallway of her home as he was nervously pocketing the $60 he had received in payment for his clothes. Her face was like that of a ghost. He tried to answer her reproof, but the words would not come, and he fled to his room, locking the door after him. He was at work there on the transaction that was to record the total disappearance of Edwin Brewster's million—his final report to Swearengen Jones, executor of James Sedgwick's will. On the floor were bundles of packages carefully wrapped and tied, and on the table was the long sheet of white paper on which the report was being drawn. The packages contained receipts—thousands upon thousands of them—for the dollars he had spent in less than a year. They were there for the inspection of Swearengen Jones, faithfully and honorably kept, as if the old westerner would go over in detail the countless documents.

He had the accounts balanced up to the hour. On the long sheet lay the record of his ruthlessness, the epitaph of a million. In his pocket was exactly $79.08. This was to last him for less than forty-eight hours, and then it would go to join the rest. It was his plan to visit Grant & Ripley on the afternoon of the 22d and to read the report to them in anticipation of the meeting with Jones on the day following.

THOUGHTLESS TOURISTS

Two Americans Made Trouble on an I. C. R. Train.

There are tourists and tourists! The majority are desirable but there are a few who are not- Some of the tourists act occasionally as if they were brought up in utter disregard of the rights or sensibilities of others. On No. 25 express on Monday, between Moncton and St. John the conductor became very much annoyed. It is not often that an I. C. R. conductor is cross and therefore if he is so, there must be a reason. On this occasion the conductor was cross with much justification and the surprise is that he did not stop the train and put two tourists off with the intimation that walking was good enough for them. It was a scorching afternoon, and the tourists were thirsty, they had two bottles of beer. They took the cover of the water tank off and put their bottles of beer down in the drinking water to cool. Jdst as the conductor came along, to his horror, he saw one of these gentry turn up his coat sleeve and put his dirty unwashed hand and arm down in the drinking tank to fish up one of the bottles of beer. The conductor said things, but he did not say all that he thought. The passengers would have excused him if he had. The two Yankee tourists were suspised that Canadian travellers on the train objected to drinking any further out of the tank on that occasion. If the conductor had taken the offenders and pitched them off the train, it would have been a punishment fitting to the crime There ought to be some regulations or other whereby conductors could have offenders of this class arrested and punished as a warning.—Moncton Transcript.

A FILLER OF JINKS.

"Betty is always filling in chinks," some one remarked of a bright, sweet-faced girl. "I don't know whether other families are like ours in having a chronic dearth of some special household necescity. The big things, of course, we always attend to—it's the safety matches or some other such trifle we are always forgetting to order when we go into town."

"That's the way with us," said another girl. "It's a standing joke in our house that we'll get some pepper as soon as 'pay day' comes around, for somehow we are always finding our pepper-boxes empty."

"Well, since Betty came home," continued the first speaker, "it's all been changed. She's taken it upon herself to look after just such trifles. We used to have a wild search for a decent lead pencil if anybody asked for one. Now Betty keeps each desk and some other convenient places, too, supplied with beautifully sharpened pencils. She remembers when we are almost out of matches and orders them, and she always thinks to water the house-plants and change the water for the cut flowers. It was nobody's business to do that before, but Betty has made it hers since she came home. She is always calling herself commonplace and without a single talent, but the rest of us think that her thoughtfulness is a very real sort of talent and a most comfortable one to have in the family."

"That gives me an idea," laughed the other girl. "I've always been the commonplace one at our house. I can't do any of the charming things that Grace and Edna can, but I suppose I could keep the pepper-boxes filled, and the palms watered, and, oh, dear! How many things I can find to do if I keep my eyes open!"—Ex.

An amicable division of an estate over which there could have been many disputes and lawyers' fees was sensibly arranged not long since in California by the tossing of a coin.

The old pioneers, Bart Smithson and wife, died leaving as an estate an interest in a large tract of land. There were four heirs, but the estate was never administered. Last year one of the heirs deeded to his son 10 acres but the gift was found to be void, for the wife's estate had an interest in the property.

A grand legal mixup was sighted afar. The heirs got together, and had the property divided into four equal parts. The district attorney was agreed upon as the person to twirl the coin and to decide which should make the first selection. In this way, the estate was settled, each heir in turn giving the other a quitclaim deed.—New York Herald.

WORSE THAN CHICAGO.

Paris Newspapers Make Startling Expose of French Food Products.

New York, Aug. 24.—The Paris correspondent of a local paper calls attention to the fact that a Paris newspaper, Martin, published a leading article with a map showing the chief supply centres of all France, declaring that the alimentary products furnished by the majority of them have been of a death dealing character. The Martin points out that this horrible condition is to be remedied by a law, the passage of which will be secured by M. Ruan, minister of agriculture, but the paper does not hesitate to say that the people who furnished these products have been divided into two classes, who it franvly describes as thieves and assassins.

The Martin characterizes that such thieves as these who have been selling Oleomargenine are assassins, those who have been selling skimmed milk as the anti-septicized article, thus robbing mothers and murdering infants, the latter to the number of 50,000 a year.
