FOOLISH TACTICS.

Probably Mr. Carvell struck the nail pretty fairly on the head when he observed in the Transcontinental Railway discussion in parliament, that Mr. Crockett, who unfortunately sits for this constituency in that body, would be pleased if the central and not the valley route should be selected in this province, or the road should not be built at all.

Mr. Crockett's attitude on the question during the election campaign and in the House yesterday, justifies the belief that in his inmost soul he is hoping that the government will decide against the valley route.

It would be a great deal better for the prospects of the valley route if York had a representative in parliament who had judgment enough to keep silent rather than deliver the injurious remarks Mr. Crockett made on the matter as reported in another column.

Just now, when every possible pressure should be brought to bear on the government to induce the election of the valley route, when party politics should be dropped by every man who has the interests of this part of the country at heart, and when all should unite in a common effort to urge our claims, Mr. Crockett butts in with an indiscreet, wild and undesired attack on the government, simply to satisfy a desire for a temporary partisan advantage.

This is about the size of the member for York, and is a striking illustration of the serious mistake this constituency made in sending such a raw, undeveloped, mischievous and narrow representative to Ottawa.

Mr. Carvell, in a forceful speech, tried to undo the harm Mr. Crockett sought to inflict on the prospects of the valley route, and no doubt his address will have its effect to the end desired by the advocates of the valley route. Mr. Carvell is a fighter who will know and discuss every feature of the effort that is being made to prejudice the chances of the valley route. It was through his and Senator Thompson's efforts, backed by the action of the people of this city and Woodstock, that a re-survey of the valley route was ordered, while Mr. Crockett never lifted a finger to aid the movement.

If the valley route is finally chosen, it will be because of the new survey not yet completed, and, in spite of the evident desire of York's representative to balk the efforts of the valley advocates by his injudicious, foolish course in parliament.

Mr. Crockett's constituents should call him home and keep him here until the question of routes is finally determined, for he is only adding to the difficulties which the friends of the valley route are meeting in their efforts to secure the location of the line this way.

THE CARLETON SITUATION.

Some political friends of Messrs. Flemming and Smith, M. P.'s, for Carleton, recognizing the finger of fate that points to their defeat in the next election, are trying to put a little life into the old Tory corpse in that constituency, and to that end are organizing a banquet for the two gentlemen, at which such life long friends of the opposition as Organizer Hubbard and a Fredericton newspaper man just recently on the government pay sheet, are to be among the guests of honor.

Messrs. Flemming and Smith will need a great many banquets and more effective efforts than his Carleton friends can put into the service to save them from the defeat which awaits them on an appeal to the people.

The opposition party stands discredited all over the province, and perhaps in no constituency is it surer to meet defeat than in Carleton, which is shaking itself clear of Toryism, and is returning to its former Liberal allegiance.

This change has already been indicated in the triumphant return of Mr. F. B. Carvell to parliament, and in Hon. W. P. Jones' unopposed election to the legislature, and it will be even more apparent when Carleton sends Mr. Flemming and Mr. Smith about their business, and returns to the assembly a full ticket to support the government.

EDITOR AND PREACHER.

Rev. J. A. Macdonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, occupied the pulpit of the American Presbyterian Church at Montreal Sunday, and in discussing his duality, the Montreal

Herald says: "Mr. Macdonald is better known as a journalist than as a preacher, but his reputation as a pulpit orator is by no means confined to his own locality. It is a good many years since he gave up active ministerial work in order to accept the position of editor of the Westminster, but he has ever since been in sufficient demand as a preacher for special occasions to keep his gift of oratory on a par with his strength as a writer. The members of the American Church were, therefore, eager to hear one whose editorials in the Globe have caused a great deal of comment from time to time."

CURRENT COMMENT

To-day's blizzard does not look encouraging for new Easter bonnets.

The city is enjoying relief from aldermanic oratory.

General Booth at the age of 77, is planning a trip to Japan by the way of Siberia, quite a journey for so old a man.

The Zulu Chief Bambaata, who has been making trouble for the authorities in Natal is said to have escaped with his warriors to Zululand.

Now if the St. John river counties had a united delegation of government supporters, at Ottawa to urge the adoption of the Valley route. What a pull they would have with Laurier."

There is trouble in the Dowie household. The old lady is standing up with the prophet's enemies at Zion city, and Dowie says he will live with her no more. The divorce court will be the next scene of these matrimonial infelicities.

Mr. Hazen is to be among the guests at the Flemming-Smith Tory banquet at Woodstock. What will he have to say about the opposition fiasco in the Central railway question. If the road is such a sink hole as Mr. Hazen described it, how came and his entire party, including Messrs. Fleming and Smith, to vote against leaving the road at $21,000 a year.

Governor Fraser of Nova Scotia made his first public appearance at Truro on Saturday when with members of the government and legislature, he visited the government model farm and agricultural college on the outskirts of that town. The Governor took great interest in the institutions and warmly commended their work. He said he was born on a farm himself, and appreciated the great advance made in agricultural methods.

CATTLE EMBARGO DEBATE.

British Press Comments on Cold Reception.

London, April 7.—The fate of the cattle embargo bill is a subject of general discussion this morning. The Chronicle says the conclusion is a disappointment, and that it was killed by too much zeal. Explaining why the Speaker declined the Cairns motion for closure of the debate, he says: "It was most unusual for it not to be granted after a day's discussion of private members' bills. Probably he acted on several grounds. The first introducer and seconder took up over an hour and a half between them. These speakers reduced the time three hours and a half, leaving a short period for a full debate. Then after 5 o'clock many members rose from all parts of the House to speak, thus showing that the discussion was still in full swing. It may comfort the disappointed to know that the bill would not have been carried, as a force of Conservatives, Protectionists and Irish, and about three or four score Liberals would have sufficed to reject it. The debate was a great argument for short speeches. So intense was the feeling that the crowded benches, seething with excited members, suggested a full-dress debate on some vital political issue."

Editorially The Chronicle says the act is a piece of protective legislation for one trade, and incidentally a slap in the face for one of the great colonies.

The Tribune says: "We cannot but recognize the ease with which people slip into a protectionist attitude." The News also comments on the protectionist phase of the act and the fact that the Tory Imperialist Opposition was solidly against the Canadian claim. The Telegram asks why Bannerman did not allow a representative of the Board of Agriculture to explain the view of his department. The truth is that the board is notoriously opposed to a removal of the restrictions, so Edward Strath was muzzled.

As another reason for refusing the closure it is said the Speaker thought it unfair to allow a private bill so revolutionary, as far as British and Irish agriculture was concerned, to be submitted after only five hours' discussion. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, Liberal humorist, celebrates the occasion with three verses. One reads: "We are all for free trade, purest that's made."

And for it all steadfastly battle: But beyond all deception We must make exception. When it comes to Canadian cattle.

INCUBATORS AND BREEDERS.

The hatching season is at hand and those who contemplate raising over two hundred chicks will find incubators and brooders more convenient than the natural method and at the same time they can hatch their chickens early, which means a better chance next winter.

There are a few points that need consideration in artificial incubating and brooding.

The incubator should be operated where the air is pure. If the air in the room where the machine is run has an offensive odor due to the smell of kerosene, of decaying wood or vegetables, the room is not a good place to run a machine. The machine may hatch fairly well but to raise the chicks is another question. Thousands of chicks are ruined by being hatched in ill ventilated rooms, especially if very moist.

The machine, especially a hot air machine, must not be run in a direct draught as it may heat unevenly. It is vital to have two or more thermometers and place them in different parts of the egg tray, before putting the eggs in, to make sure your machine has no "hot spots." Raise or lower the ends of the machine until it heats within at least a degree and one half at each part. If a hot spot is found in the centre of the machine, screened by attaching a cloth or a piece of metal under the top of the egg chamber. This will usually cause the heat to distribute better.

It is wise to follow the manufacturer's directions as to operating the machine. Different makes require different treatment and different quantities to do good work. Care should always be taken to keep the lamp and burner clean. At times the wire at the base of the burner gets dirty or covered with dust; this should be well cleaned, otherwise the lamp is liable to flicker or smoke.

Chicks, as a rule, are more easily hatched than reared. Mortality in young chicks is frequently due to bad incubating; i.e., machines run in rooms in which the air is foul, or ran uneven in temperature. The parent stock being sickly or lacking in vigor, one can not be too particular about this point when selecting breeding stock; or it may be due to bad feeding and feeding, such as too low and high temperatures, feeding sloppy feeds, insecticide feeds, or too much at a time followed by short feeds.

Our method of feeding is usually to remove the chicks from the incubator to the brooder, which has been bedded with clean straw or hay and warmed to 95 degrees, at the age of 36 to 48 hours. We place on a board some grit, also some bread crumbs or cracked wheat and oatmeal. We keep this well supplied for perhaps two days, until all the chicks know where to look for food. We also keep a constant supply of pure water in easy access. After the second day in the brooder we begin feeding about five or six times daily just what the chickens eat up quickly.

It is still somewhat of a debatable point, whether it is wise to feed a young chick all it wants to eat before it is two weeks of age. We try to feed a little less than they would eat. Such feeds as bread and milk are given early in the morning, which is fed on clean boards or troughs. At nine o'clock some cracked wheat or pin head oat meal is fed, or if these are not to be had, small wheat screenings. This is buried slightly in the litter on the floor so as to induce the chicks to exercise. The above feeds are used alternately.

Before there is any grass, we feed usually two feeds a day, after the chicks are a week old, of grated or chopped root or onions, sometimes boiled potatoes; enough shorts and bran is added to this to absorb the juices of the root. We try to have the chicks drink some milk or if this is not at hand, we keep beef scrap in easy access. The feeding of much cooked or raw meat is dangerous—a little is good. Where there is plenty of milk or insects the animal food is not essential. After three weeks of age, feed three times a day, plenty of vegetables and grass (and exercise) grit, water and broken charcoal in easy access. Reduce heat in brooder 4 degrees per week until 75 degrees is reached. Chicks 5 or 6 weeks old require no artificial heat.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. STUDIED IN MADHOUSE.

Famous New York Murder Trial Recalled by Albert Tighe's Efforts to Regain His Freedom.

New York, March 9.—The World

says:

Martin E. J. Tighe, a young insurance broker of this city, was charged four years ago with having killed his wife, because she was jealous of the baby that had been born to them and a commission declared him insane. His case was considered incurable and he was sent to the asylum of the criminal insane at Matteawan. After Tighe had been at Matteawan a short time, he told the doctors that he wanted to study shorthand. He sent for books of instruction and studied day and night. Then he took up drawing and made good progress. At first the doctors thought that Tighe was insane on the subject of shorthand writing. He kept in practice by writing the stories told to him by the other insane prisoners.

Tighe's lawyer a few days ago swore out a writ of habeas corpus, and yesterday the murderer was brought to Judge Kelley's court in Brooklyn, where, after Tighe had demonstrated his ability as a shorthand writer, and an artist, the judge declared him sane. He was brought to New York and locked up in the Tombs.

Tighe will now have to stand trial on the charge of wife murder. The defence will be, of course, that at the time he killed his wife Tighe was insane and that he cannot be punished for the crime.

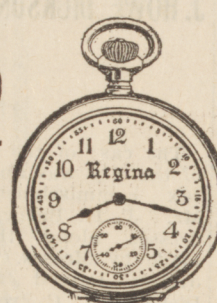

Mrs. Nuwed.—Here's the bread I started to make today. Isn't it too annoying.

Mr. Nuwed.—Why, it isn't baked at all.

Mrs. Nuwed.—I know it isn't; that is just it. I put plenty of baking powder in it but it doesn't seem to have worked.
