Peggy rebelled against his desire to spend the $70 that still remained, but he was firm in his determination. They would dine and drive together and see all of the old life that was left on $70. Then on the next day they would start all over again. There was one rude moment of dismay when it occurred to him that Peggy might be considered an "asset" if she became his wife before 9 o'clock. But he realized at once that it was only demanded of him that he be penniless and that he possess no object that had been acquired through the medium of Edwin Peter Brewster's money. Surely this wife who was not to come to him until his last dollar was gone could not be the product of an old man's fancy. But so careful was he in regard to the transaction that he decided to borrow money of Joe Bragdon to buy the license and to pay the minister's fee. Not only would he be penniless on the day of settlement, but he would be in debt. So changed was the color of the world to him now that even the failure to win Sedgwick's millions could not crush out the new life and the new joy that had come to him with the winning of Peggy Gray.

CHAPTER XXXI.

SOON after noon on the 23d of September Monty folded his report to Sverrengren Jones, stuck it into his pocket and sallied forth. A parcel delivery wagon had carried off a mysterious bundle a few minutes before. Mrs. Gray could not conceal her wonder, but Brewster's answers to her questions threw little light on the mystery. He could not tell her the big bundle contained the receipts that were to prove his sincerity when the time came to settle with Mr. Jones. Brewster had used his own form of receipt for every purchase. The little stub receipt books had been made to order for him and not only he, but every person in his employ carried one everywhere. No matter how trivial the purchase, the person who received a dollar of Brewster's money signed a receipt for the amount. Newsboys and bootblacks were the only beings who escaped the formality; tips to waiters, porters, cabbies, etc., were recorded and afterward put into a class by themselves. Receipts for the few dollars remaining in his possession were to be turned over on the morning of the 23d and the general report was not to be completed until 9 o'clock on that day.

He kissed Peggy goodbye, told her to be ready for a drive at 4 o'clock, and then went off to find Joe Bragdon and Elton Gardner. They met him by appointment, and to them he confided his design to be married on the following day.

"You can't afford it, Monty," exploded Joe fearlessly. "Peggy is too good a girl. It isn't fair to her."

"We have agreed to begin life tomorrow. Wait and see the result. I think it will surprise you. Incidentally it is up to me to engage a minister's services. It's going to be quiet, you know. Joe, you can be my best man if you like, and, Gardie, I'll expect you to sign your name as one of the witnesses."

Tomorrow evening we'll have supper at Mrs. Gray's, and among those present will not comprise a very large list, I assure you. But we'll talk about that later on. Just now I want to ask you fellows to lend me enough money to pay the preacher. I'll return it tomorrow afternoon."

"Well, I'm blessed!" exclaimed Gardner, utterly dumfounded by the nerve of the man. Gardner promised to have the minister at the Gray house the next morning. Monty's other request—made in deep seriousness—was that Peggy was not to be told of the little transaction. He then hurried off to the office of Grant & Ripley. The bundles of receipts had preceded him.

"Has Jones arrived in town?" was his first anxious question after the greetings.

"He is not registered at any of the hotels," responded Mr. Grant, and Brewster did not see the troubled look that passed over his face.

"He'll show up tonight, I presume," said he complacently. The lawyers did not tell him that all the telegrams they had sent to Sverrengren Jones in the past two weeks had been returned to the New York office as unclaimed in Butte. The telegraph company reported that Mr. Jones was not to be found and that he had not been seen in Butte since the 3d of September. The lawyers were hourly expecting word from Montana men to whom they had telegraphed for information and advice. They were extremely nervous, but Montgomery Brewster was too eager and excited to notice the fact.

(To be Continued.)

Tommy—Pa gave me a framed picture of that said "Little Boys' Should Be Seen and Not Heard."
Tommy—Now! sent it to the deaf and dumb kids at the asylum. I thought it'd cheer 'em up.

"The lady is passing fare," remarked the observing man as the conductor took her nickel.
"Yes, but that's a standing joke," replied the hog, as he resumed his newspaper and kept his seat.

"Here, hold my horse a minute, will you?"

"Sir! I am a member of congress. Never mind. You look honest, I'll take a chance."

"See, what all this blamed nonsense has cost the country!" exclaimed the western cattle raiser. "What? The investigations?" queried the other passenger. "No, darn it—the things the investigators found out!"

There was a fair maiden of Rye, Who said to her lover, "Oh, fie! You may diss me of course, But you've got to use force, And, goodness, you're stronger than I!"

Mrs. Allen—Oh, really that's nice! And did he truly say I didn't show my age?
Mrs. Cutting—Well—he said you were always very careful to conceal it.

LOVERS ENTER SUICIDE PACT.

The Girl is Dead But in all Probability the Man Will Recover.

Manchester, Aug. 27.—Fallowfield, a suburb of this city was the scene of a sad love tragedy at midnight recently.

Two young lovers, named Martha Watts, of Radnor street, Hulme, and John Chapman, West Gorton, were said to have been depressed owing to the fact that the man had been out of work and their marriage in consequence could not take place.

They went for a walk in the fields, and, after taking spirits of salts, walked to some houses abutting on to the railway.

A woman named Smith was alarmed by the appearance of a man who implored her help. She found the girl lying on a neighbor's doorstep in great prostration of mind, made an emetic which in the case of the man was effective, but his sweetheart was too far gone to swallow.

When Chapman became aware that efforts to administer an emetic to his sweetheart were unavailing, he sat down beside her on the step, put his arms round her, told her that he loved her, kissed her cheeks, and said that he would stick to her to the last.

The agonies which the girl was suffering did not prevent her reciprocating his devotion. For the turned her eyes upon him and smiled and faintly murmured some incoherent words. She died about four hours afterwards.

The man is in a serious condition but will probably recover. The police have found two bottles, and a handkerchief in the fields, there Chapman said they had taken the poison.

AUTO ANNOYED THE MULE.

Enraged by Odor Sagacious Anima Attacks a Car.

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 25.—A mule hitched to a delivery wagon and driven by W. A. Sellers caused a panic in the Southern Depot here today by smashing in the engine box of Captain W. B. Wilkinson's big automobile.

The mule appeared not to like the odor of the machine, and, having been driven up close to it, he set upon the automobile with both his hind feet and tore great holes in the side of the box. People expected the machine would explode before the mule could be got off but it did not.

Captain Wilkerson had Sellers arrested and he was held to the Grand Jury in the sum of $100 bail for injuring private property.

IMPORTED TWO WIVES.

London, Aug. 25.—The editor of a matrimonial newspaper interviewed by The Tribune exhibited a letter received from Canada enclosing $250. He had married two sisters to two young Canadians of decent position. The Canadians had called upon the editor when in London, and left their photographs. The ladies approved of the photos, and correspondence followed.

Some newspapers men are terrible liars. In writing up a cyclone, one west one of them said it turned a mile inside out, a cellar upside down moved a township line, blew the staves out of a whiskey barrel and left nothing but the bunglehole, changed the day of the week, blew a mortgage off a farm, blew out the cracks of a fence and knocked the wind out of a politician.

"Do you know what I am?" demanded the Irish caller.
"Oh, yes!" said the society reporter, "you're Mr. Hogg, who gave the swell dinner last night."
"Exactly! Now, what in thunder did you mean by calling it a swell dinner in today's paper?"
