GOVERNOR JONES DEAD.

Honored Son of Nova Scotia Passed Away Suddenly at Halifax.

Halifax, March 15.—Hon. Alfred Jones, lieutenant governor of Nova Scotia, died suddenly this morning. His honor had been in London at that time. He was for a considerable time lieutenant colonel and commanded the 1st brigade Garrison Artillery at Halifax. He was a legislator two weeks ago. Last night he dined with his family as usual and was in good spirits. He retired early apparently in good health and slept well until twelve thirty o'clock when he complained of pains in his stomach. Three doctors were hastily summoned, but in twenty minutes the lieutenant governor was dead, apoplexy being the cause of death. Three days ago the lieutenant governor wrote a touching letter of sympathy to relatives of his friend, Archbishop O'Brien, who died under similar circumstances, and who was buried yesterday.

Hon. A. G. Jones was one of Nova Scotia's most prominent sons, and was appointed governor in 1900. He was of Loyalist descent, his grandfather, Stephen Jones, who was an officer of the King's American Dragoons, having come to Nova Scotia and settled there at the close of the American revolution. His father, the late Guy C. Jones, held for many years the office of registrar of deeds for Digby County. Born at Weymouth, in that county, Sept. 2, 1824, he was educated at Yarmouth Academy and early entered the ranks of commerce. He was at the head of the extensive West India importing firm of A. G. Jones & Co. He came into special prominence as a public man in 1865-66, as an opponent of the entrance of Nova Scotia into confederation, and for some years was the leader of the anti-confederate party in Nova Scotia.

At the general election in 1867 he was returned to the House of Commons as one of the representatives for Halifax, and continued to sit therein up to 1872, when he suffered defeat. He was again elected to represent Halifax at the general election in 1874, and he took office under Alexander Mackenzie for a brief period. He was admittedly the ablest minister of militia Canada had known up to that time. Defeated at the general election in 1878, and again in 1882, he was returned at the general election of 1887, and sat throughout the sixth parliament. At the general election of 1891 he was again one of the candidates of his party for Halifax, but was defeated by J. F. Stairs, the vote standing 5,262 to 4,335. Previous to confederation, Mr. Jones belonged to the old Conservative party, but, having allied himself with the Liberal party in 1865, then led by Joseph Howe, he remained with that party, and became its recognized local leader in 1869.

He was also a free trader and always opposed imperial federation. In 1896 he was appointed a commis-

CANADA THE MODEL.

(From the Boston Herald.)

When one takes into account that there is in the Dominion of Canada no more loyal subject of the British Crown than Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who, while of French speech and, as one might say, of French faith, and the descendants of those who fought for years against the English rule, is none the less of the opinion that the victory won by the English was of tremendous advantage to the French-Canadians. He believes that, as free citizens of Canada, a freely governed colony of Great Britain, he and his countrymen are enjoying rights which could not by any possibility have come to them if the fortunes of war had turned out differently from what they did. It is greatly to be hoped that conclusions such as this will be drawn, and speedily drawn, by the Boers in South Africa. Certainly the leaders of the Liberal party propose to do all that they can to gain this end.

Miss Elderleigh—Just think, Mr. Braix, I am within ten years of thirty-five.

Mr. Braix—I can't believe you.

Miss Elderleigh—That's sweet of you—but it's true.

Mr. Braix—Well, if anybody else had said you were forty-five I'd have said they were five years out anyhow.
