A DAMNABLE CRIME.

Details of the Murder of a Little Girl at Montreal.

Montreal, April 6.—The mutilated body of Ida Mary Ahern, five years of age, was found yesterday morning in the woods at Cote St. Paul, a suburb of the city. The little girl resided with her parents on Napoleon street, St. Cunegonde, and was last seen alive on Tuesday evening.

Then she was seen by John Darling, who works in a saw mill on the canal bank, in company with a man partially intoxicated. Darling helped the couple over a bridge at the rear of the mill. The little girl was crying, but he paid no particular attention to the fact at the time, believing the man in her company to be her father. There was no clothing on the body of the child when found except its boots and shoes. The clothing was found previous to the discovery of the body in the yard of the church at Cote St. Paul, and the police have found a woman who saw a man throw them over the fence. The description given by her tallies with that given by Darling, and hopes are expressed that he will be found before long. The case has created much excitement.

What makes the crime appear all the more damnable is that there is every ground to believe that it was premeditated. On Napoleon street where the Ahern family reside, several responsible men said that for some time they had observed a strange man, corresponding to the description by Darling, lurking about and apparently watching the girl. The stranger was several times seen to follow her for some distance. In this regard the man who will probably prove a valuable witness is Mr. Major, who keeps a grocery store at the corner of Napoleon and Notre Dame streets. Mr. Dyot, who is proprietor of a restaurant on Napoleon street, confirms the evidence of Mr. Major.

The little girl was just five years of age, having celebrated her fifth birthday ten days ago. She belongs to a family of five, having three brothers and a sister.

The oldest of the family is just ten years of age. Little Ida was a plump, healthy girl, somewhat large for her age. She had brown hair and fair complexion and was considered very pretty. Her family, and especially her mother, are prostrated with grief.

Immediately on hearing the report this morning that the body of the murdered girl had been found, a reporter called at the Ahern home. The mother was alone with her children, Mr. Ahern having gone to St. Anne de Bellevue in answer to a report that a band of gypsies were in that neighborhood.

The news had not yet arrived of the horrible find made by the police at Cote St. Paul. Mrs. Ahern, who is yet quite a young woman, wept continuously while in the presence of the reporter and yet she did not seem to have despaired of finding her little girl. She repeated over and over, "she is not dead, they have left her clothes out there just to deceive us in order to escape with our daughter. Her father will find Ida this morning."

Mrs. Ahern when her caller was departing sent with him her eldest child, a little boy of ten years, to show the reporter the way to St. Cunegonde police station.

At the station a group of policemen and detectives were discussing the murder and reviewing all the horrible details of the find made just an hour before. The little boy listened to the talk and caught a glimmering of its meaning.

"Have they found my sister?" he asked eagerly.

An officer informed him sadly that she had been found.

"Then she is dead?" exclaimed the little fellow giving way to a paroxysm of weeping. Without another word he turned and ran down the street towards his home, a few blocks away. It was from his lips that the mother heard the first news of the tragedy.

robberies," said Gallagher.

"Oh, yes," replied Moyle. "One night, long after I had gone to bed at home, I suddenly found myself out in the street with a lot of rings and brooches in my hand. I looked at them and saw that they contained valuable jewels. Frightened, I threw them into a sewer."

She was married just ten years ago. Her husband is one of the brothers of Frederick, Queen of Wurttemberg and is an officer in the Austrian army.

STOLE IN HIS SLEEP.

Dual Personality to Explain Acts of Jersey Youth.

New York, April 6.—In Edwin Moyle, 17 years old, son of respectable parents in Jersey City, the police believe they have a remarkable case of dual personality. In his normal state Edwin is modest and well behaved. In the abnormal state, according to his confession, he has stolen much valuable jewelry and thrown it away. By order of the court a doctor is to examine his mental condition. Meantime he is out on parole.

The Moyle family live in a fashionable neighborhood in which there have been many robberies. Detective Sergeant Gallagher got descriptions of the thief from several persons who had fleeting glimpses of him. All fitted young Moyle.

But the detective learned that the boy was studious, of orderly habits and a regular attendant at a business college. Gallagher, on more evidence arrested Moyle in the street.

"I'll tell you all about this stealing business," said Young Moyle to the detective and Chief Murphy. "Whenever I robbed a place I was unconscious. I mean to say I did not know what I was doing or how I did it."

In the midst of the conversation young Moyle stopped and gazed straight ahead. His attention seemed fixed on something far away. Chief Murphy and Gallagher spoke to him again and again, but he made no response. He remained in this condition for about 30 minutes. Then suddenly he turned, looked at his companions and asked, "Where was I?" "You were telling us about the
