THE LATE DR. HARRISON.

The death of Dr. Thomas Harrison late Chancellor of the University of New Brunswick, removes a gentleman who for many years has been an active and useful force in the educational affairs of this province.

Dr. Harrison was a country boy, who early appreciated the advantages of a liberal education, and at considerable sacrifice reached a high position in scholastic attainment and imparting his knowledge to successive generations of his youth of this province. Higher education indeed owes a debt of gratitude to the deceased gentleman and his name will ever be linked to the University, in which he spent thirty-six years of his active life.

After a distinguished career at Trinity College, Dublin, Dr. Harrison returned to his native province and entered upon his life work at the University, and whether in his capacity as professor of mental and moral philosophy, in the chair of mathematics, as president and chancellor, he gave painstaking and successful service to that institution, retiring only when disease demanded it. So long was he identified with that institution that it will seem strange indeed to find it reopening in a few days without Dr. Harrison in his accustomed place.

The deceased was a gentleman of high character, and his hearty interest in all that pertained to the mental, physical and spiritual interests of the students under him will not soon be forgotten. His bright and cheery disposition made him a favorite in social circles, and in all the relations of life he was a gentleman highly honored and respected.

To the bereaved widow and family, the Herald extends on behalf of this community sincere sympathy in their great bereavement.

A WOMAN'S RIGHT.

If it were not for the women, it is doubtful if there would be so many churches open for spiritual business.

Certainly the work would not be carried on to the extent at present prevailing.

Women are more religious than men they are more regular attendants at church, and are the church's backbone and often its brains. Walk into any church at the Sunday services and you will find that three fourths the congregation is composed of women. Visit the weekly prayer meetings, and the same conditions will be found. The bulk of the Sunday school teachers are women, and about all the religion a man gets is from a woman, his mother.

Not only in spiritual affairs are the women the mainstay of the church, but in its business affairs they are its chief backers. Men in trustee and quarterly boards may apportion and vote the money of the church but the women are foremost in raising it.

Why then should they not be organized in church courts? Why should they not have a voice in the selection and disposal of church business, the right to vote in the selection of a pastor, in the erection of churches and in all the assemblies where church matters are considered?

These reflections are called out by the action of the Methodist general conference in defeating the proposition to admit women to church courts.

The arguments against the proposal are lame and inconclusive.

Men say the home is woman's sphere of action, and so it is, but the close relationship between the home and the church give women the right to have a decisive voice in the latter as well as in the former.

We do not believe in women suffering with respect to political matters, but there is no analogy between that and the right of women to a say in church government.

MASHER THRASHED.

Chased Girl to St. Paul's. Brookline, but Met John Lynne and Girl's Lover.

Boston Herald.—In the shadow of St. Paul's Episcopal church, Brookline, last evening, while the vested boy choir was rehearsing a service of praise, there occurred a terrific rough and tumble fight between John Lynne, one of the choir singers, and a "masher" who had insulted Lynne's sweetheart. To the very steps of the auditorium the stranger followed the young woman, and while she was weeping and hysterical, crouched in a corner of the church corridor, her hands covering her face to shut out the sight of the offending stranger, Lynne's attention was directed by a small boy, who had seen the performance. The stranger stood, half-way within the church door, when Lynne left the choir room.

He saw his sweetheart shaking like a leaf and between sobs she pointed out the man who still stood in the door. She could say nothing but: "There he is, Jack, that man there."

Lynne rushed at him and shot out his right clenched fist, and the fellow staggered back from the effects of a blow full on the jaw. The stranger made a show of resistance, but he got another blow between the eyes and this time he sank to the ground bleeding. Word had gone to the choir singers of the battle without the door, and many of them rushed in time to see the fellow pick himself up and run with all his speed down Aspinwall avenue with Lynne and several of the singers giving chase. Lynne, however, caught up to him, and administered a parting kick, which assisted him over a low growth of shrubbery.

The young woman is Miss Helen Cilley, one of Brookline's prettiest girls. It was some time before she recovered from the shock. Lynne was the hero of the hour.

The young woman was on her way to St. Paul's church, having started from her home about seven o'clock. She had just turned the corner of Aspinwall avenue when she noticed a man walking directly behind her. He caught up to her, and then paused until she had passed him. This he repeated several times and each time Miss Cilley was greatly frightened, but counted on meeting some one on the rather unfrequented street. She was in sight of the church, and hurried across the street. There she lost sight of the "masher" and thought that he had continued down the street.

She stood on the lawn at the side of the street near the opened door, listening to the choir singing, and awaiting the coming of Lynne, the rehearsal having been nearly ended, when she heard some one at her side remark:

"Can't I listen, too?"

Then she ran into the church. There are some streets in Brookline that are seldom free from the "masher," and there have been many complaints to the police. Lynne is a husky young man, about 25 years old. He is a member of a crack Boston military regiment.

A Lincoln Reminiscence.

In the summer of 1864 the Lincolns went to live in the cottage near the Soldiers' home outside Washington the president was daily accompanied on his drives to and from the White House by his special mounted escort of tall Ohioans. There was serious need for such an escort, for Early was not far away from the city, but the daily journey sometimes had its playful side. "The Magazine of American History" quotes this reminiscence by Lieutenant Ashmun of the escort: "It was in the early autumn of that year when one morning on our ride in to the White House, 'Dad' Lincoln, who alone was riding with his father, demanded that the carriage be stopped and that one of the escort should climb a wayside tree and get him some persimmons. Mr. Lincoln acquiesced, and while the boy's wish was being gratified the president turned to those nearest him and remarked upon some plowing doing near by and ended by saying: 'I hope to see the day when our western prairies will be plowed by steam, and I believe it will be done. I have always felt a great interest in that subject.'"

No Nonsense About Her.

Skids—Did she say it was so sudden when you asked her to marry you? Ask—Of course she didn't. She was a widow.

That the leading medical writer and teachers of all the several schools of practice endorse and recommend in the strongest terms, each and every ingredient entering into the composition of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for the cure of weak stomach, dyspepsia, catarrh of stomach, liver complaint, torpid liver, or biliousness, chronic heart affections, and all catarrhal diseases of whatever region, name or nature. It is also a specific remedy for all such chronic or long standing cases of catarrhal affections and their results, as bronchitis, throat and lung diseases (except consumption) accompanied with severe coughs. It is put so good for acute colds and coughs, but for lingering or chronic cases it is especially efficacious in producing perfect cures. It contains Black Cherrybark, Golden Seal root, Bile root, Stone root, Mandrake root, and Queen's root—all of which are highly praised as remedies for all the above mentioned affections by such eminent medical writers and teachers as Prof. Bartholow of Jefferson Medical College, Chicago; Prof. John King, M.
