STRANGE STORIES BY SURVIVORS.

True Humanity Showed its Influence—Queer Freaks of the Earthquake.

Salt Lake, Utah, April 25.—Scores of Salt Lake people were in San Francisco at the time of the earthquake and many of them returned home yesterday. J. J. Daly, a wealthy mine owner, escaped with his wife and four children. He left the Charlemagne Hotel in his automobile, but the police made him give it up to carry the wounded.

Another arrival described a number of queer freaks of the earthquake. In the midst of ruined four story buildings stood a house of three stories, which had been tilted on jackscrews and timbers to make room for another storey beneath it. It stood apparently unharmed by the shock. Not a piece of the under-pinning was displaced.

One of the houses on Van Ness avenue had a mosque like dome. All the walls fell away but the steel structure, invisible at a distance, remained supporting the dull grey dome which seemed floating in the air like a balloon.

Two theatrical people were in a hotel in Santa Rosa when the shock came. The room was on the fourth floor. The room collapsed. The woman was thrown from the bed and both were caught by the descending timbers, and pinned helplessly beneath the debris. After three hours rescuers came, cut a hole in the roof and both were released uninjured. This narrator told of hearing a guest berating the proprietor of a hotel five minutes after the shock because he had not been awakened at 5 o'clock according to instructions.

Miss Ina C. Rothwell, a student, tells of incidents at Stanford University. A girl was dressing in one of the sorority houses when the floor gave way. Her companion looked up, said "Where are you, Mary?" "Oh, I am in the parlor," replied the girl calmly, as she wriggled out of the heap of plaster and mortar below.

One man, at least, according to Miss Bothwell, missed what would have been the experience of a life time because he did not wake up. Although the fraternity was almost razed to the ground this man, whose name she did not learn, was still sleeping when taken from the ruins.

Dr. George V. Schramm, a young medical graduate, says: "I was passing down Market street with a new found friend an automobile came rushing along with two soldiers in it. My doctor's badge protected me, but the soldiers invited my companion, a husky six footer, to get into the automobile. He said, 'I don't want to ride and have plenty of business to attend to.' Once more they invited him and he refused. One of the soldiers pointed a gun at him and said: 'We need such men as you to save women and children and to help fight the fire.' The man jumped on his way to find his sister but he yielded to the inevitable. He worked all day with the soldiers and when released to get lunch he felt that he could conscientiously desert to go and find his own loved ones."

QUEEN MAY ACT AS KING'S PROXY.

English Sovereign Can Transfer Power to His Consort.

"M. A. P." of London in an article on "What the Queen can do," says: Strict as the laws appertaining to high treason have been they did not always include the consort, to that plotters were able to threaten the life of the consort at will, and incur no responsibility whatever. When Mary married Philip of Spain affairs in this direction became a positive scandal, so a law was passed ordering that a consort should be included in the protection afforded to the monarch against high treason. To plot against Queen Alexandra, therefore would be high treason, and punishable with hanging, but the monarch the king dies this protection falls away, and no more notice could be taken to a plot against her life than if she were an ordinary person.

The constitution demands that the consort shall take no part whatever in the government of the country, so his official documents King Edward signs. Nevertheless, if the King becomes ill or is away from the Kingdom at the moment of some national crisis he can appoint the Queen Consort as his proxy, when her word carries as much authority as his. This has only occurred on one occasion since King Edward ascended the throne, when the Ministers of State were summoned to the Queen's presence.

Many convicted criminals owed their pardon during Queen Victoria's reign to the Prince Consort, though the law allowed him no authority for setting them free, his intervention with the Queen covering his lack of power in this respect. The law is strict in barring the consort from right to liberate a prisoner, not could Queen Alexandra sign the death warrant of one. If the King were inaccessible, then the warrant would have to wait until his signature was available. Directly the King dies his consort must take the oath of allegiance to his successor, and it is a curious point if she wishes to marry again she must obtain his sanction. So if upon the death of King Edward the Queen wished to re-marry she would have to see the permission of the present Prince of Wales.

GAPON QUIETLY HANGED.

Russian Revolutionists Have Their Revenge.

London, April 25.—An extraordinary story is published by The Manchester Guardian today from a correspondent in Russia, asserting that Father Gapon was hanged secretly April 19, by four revolutionists, who overheard him admit that he was spying on his former revolutionary colleagues on behalf of the Russian police.

REBUILD YOUR TIRED ACHING BODY.

Winter has left you in a state of fatigue and weariness. The vitality of your blood is gone. Your nerves are wretchedly weak, and you find it hard to sleep. The temptation to "brace up" with alcoholic mixture is great—but it's uselessness is plain to everyone. Better follow Nature's plan; it's always a sure one.

First create new appetite. Improve your indigestion. Improve your digestion. Perfect the process of assimilation. This will ensure a supply of rich nourishing blood.

Healthy blood soon makes a healthy body, and a system fed by pure, rich blood is bound to gain in strength and energy. To get well and stay well, use the food tonic "Ferrozone" which is composed of concentrated vegetable extracts that supply nutrition that every sickly person needs.

No matter how long you have been you back like it did Mrs. Sadie E. Bishop of Whitby, Ont., who writes: "Ferrozone not only brings health to the sick, but has power to cure quickly. After being confined to bed with sickness, I seemed unable to make any headway on the road to complete health. My vitality was low and I was in great need of strength. My nerve force was gone and from headaches and poor sleep I was in bad straits. Ferrozone was just what I needed. It increased my strength, gave me a new feeling entirely. I used about eight boxes and was made perfectly well. My doctor thinks Ferrozone a wonderful cure."

Yout druggist sells it in 50c. boxes or six boxes for $2.50. By mail from N. C. Polson & Co., Hartford, Conn., U. S. A., and Kingston, Ontario.

HOW TWELVE MURDEROUS KAFFIRS WERE SHOT.

Paid the Death Penalty in Batches of Six for Killing Two Members of the Police Force.

Reitermaritzburg, April 22.—The twelve natives of Natal shot here for the murder of two members of the police force all acknowledged the sentence just and professed repentance. The scene was an impressive one—one never to be forgotten in the history of this country. The Kaffirs were shot in two batches of six. The condemned had passed the previous night in singing hymns, and offering prayers. About two hundred members of the Natal police provided the guard and firing party. Three native chiefs attended the execution.

The first six prisoners were escorted to an open grave which had been dug. One of the condemned was a minister of the native Ethiopean church. The natives had spent the night in singing hymns so loudly that they had kept the Richmond residents living in the vicinity of the prison awake by their fervent clamor. When the condemned were lined up eagerly to the adjurations of the church of England clergyman.

The spot where the execution took place lay between three gently sloping hills was at the bottom of the hollow. About 200 natives stood on the slope and there were a small number of European spectators behind. A cordon of Natal police with fixed bayonets kept one side of the enclosure. The natives were placed immediately in front of the firing party, and all watched the preparations gravely without any demonstrations. The condemned marched down the side hill, keeping pace steadily with their escort and

STOOD AT THE EDGE OF THE FIRST GRAVE.

A church of England clergyman performed the last rites while an officer harangued the assembled natives, describing the offense of the condemned men and the necessity of the government demanding a re-quit.

Then the six natives, blind-folded, stood handcuffed with their backs to the firing party, consisting of 36 police in command of an inspector. The doomed men stood erect, not one flinching even when the police locking the bolts of their rifles, after loading disturbed the silence. One man at the end of the line, the Ethiopean pastor, of the Kraal to which the condemned belonged, heard this sound and raised his left hand, which was not manacled. He kept it lifted in an attitude as though he were apostrophizing the deity, until six bullets, for the Natal police are unfailing marksmen—took him in the back of the neck, between his shoulders and he dropped without a tremor, first on his knees and then on his face.

The Kaffir is not given to betraying outward fear when he knows that the resources of cunning and force have failed him, so the others met their deaths manfully, with a momentary convulsion. The bullets buried themselves in their shoulders, and then they collapsed, death being instantaneous. The police directions were to aim at the spinal column at the base of the neck. While a military officer commenced a fresh address

SPENT LIFE WITHIN CLOISTER WALLS.

Mother of Don Carlos, the Spanish Pretender.

Vienna, April 25.—Almost entirely forgotten by the world, there has just passed away in the Austrian convent of the Sisters of the Holy Cross at Gorz, an imperial princess who has moved inside the cloister walls or worn any other garb than that of the nun since she took up her abode there on the death of her husband more than twenty years ago.

An archduchess of the reigning house of Austria and the sister of the late sovereign duke of Modena, who lost his throne in 1860, she was the mother of Don Carlos, the pretender to the throne of Spain, and of his younger brother, Don Alfonso of Bourbon, president of the International Anti-Duelling league. Among her grandchildren are Don Jaime, the son of Don Carlos, and his sisters, three of whom, Princess Elvira, who eloped with the Roman painter Folchi, Alice, who has been divorced by her husband, Prince Frederick Schoenburg, in consequence of her elopement with the Italian cavalry captain named Prede, and a Princess Beatrice, who endeavored to commit suicide some time ago by throwing herself into the Tiber river, in consequence of the unhappiness of her marriage to Prince Fabian Massimo. The latter furnished abundant material to the chronic scandalous of old world royalty.

In fact it has been always understood that one of the chief motives which led the venerable Archduchess Maria Beatrice to withdraw to the cloister was for the purpose of endeavoring to atone by means of prayer and by the devotion of the remainder of her days entirely to religion for the delinquencies and unsavory ways of her eldest son, Don Carlos, and of her three youngest daughters. Her husband, Don Juan of Spain, was the second son of the first Don Carlos. The latter was the youngest brother of Ferdinand VII., of Spain, and, according to the laws of succession, the crown should have gone to him in default of male issue of the king. But Ferdinand monitory address to the natives, the police doctors examined the bodies. Life was extinct in all, and the corpses were buried immediately in the clothes they were wearing.

A short delay occurred with the arrival of the second batch owing to the sudden flight in frantic fear of the native driver of the two tumbrils which was improvised for the occasion out of a two wheeled bullock cart, and which conveyed the prisoners from the jail to the place of execution. The man said he was unable to bear the dreadful business, and took to his heels. Another native was then requisitioned.

The second group of condemned consisted of Kaffir youths. They were less collected than the older men who had gone to death before them, but were quite plucky, and submitted to the binding of their brows with black handkerchiefs without a tremor and allowed themselves to be led to the brink of their grave, resigned, and fearless. Only one of their number, a mere stripling, and this only when one of the firing party discharged his rifle accidentally. The lad ducked forward, and five seconds later was a lifeless heap. The other five could be heard audibly encouraging one another with assurances that they should meet each other in a better world, until they also died. A gang of native convicts from the jail guarded the bodies, which were little disfigured considering the number of charges they received. All of the deaths were quite instantaneous and painless. Among the firing party was Sergeant Stephens who nearly lost his life by Assegai wounds in the charge made upon Inspector Hunt's party of police when the Inspector was killed.

SHOWED ANY SIGNS OF DISCOMPOSURE.

The execution is said to have served a most salutary purpose with the natives who witnessed it. The Kaffir is impressed far more by what he sees with his own eyes than by what is conveyed to him by report. The day becomes a legend to be told of for years. Severe language was not spared in addressing the natives after the execution. The chiefs were told that if there was a favor of offenders they would be all punished for disobedience to the supreme chief's orders. Majongee, the head man of the Kraal to which the murderers belonged is still in jail with two others. Sentence has been deferred on them as well as a favor of offenders for offences in the southern part of the colony. It was the head man Majongee who took the rifle of Sub-Inspector Hunt, one of the murdered men while they were still alive.

One of the three native chiefs who attended the execution was the chief Unskofeli. A fourth chief arrived after the execution. He said he was not afraid to see the sentence carried out. One chief petitioned pitifully to be excused from witnessing the death of his fellow natives, but was not allowed to absent himself, and had to take his place in the front rank of his followers.

VII. was induced by his Neapolitan wife, Queen Christina, to change the order of succession in favor of his eldest daughter, who, at his death, became queen sovereign of Spain with the title of Queen Isabella II.

Prince Charles, thereupon, with the object of establishing his rights to the crown, inaugurated a series of sanguinary and disastrous Carlist wars which proved the blight of Spain, and the principal obstacle to her development and prosperity all through the nineteenth century.

To Prince John the idea of shedding the blood of brother Spain was became more and more repugnant, especially after the terrible savagery with which the earlier of the Carlist wars was conducted, and accordingly he waived his pretensions in favor of his eldest son, Don Carlos, who is known as King Charles VII. of Spain, his father's eldest brother having styled himself Charles VI., while his grandfather, the original Don Carlos, was Charles V.

APPRECIATED GENEROSITY.

American Paper Refers to Canadian Parliament's Vote to San Francisco Suffragists.

Montreal, April 25.—A special from Detroit says: The Detroit Journal (Rep.) last night comments editorially:—

"The first appropriation of the United States Congress for the relief of San Francisco was $1,000,000. Canada, which has less than one-twelfth of the population of the United States, and a still smaller proportion of resources, granted a government appropriation of $100,000."

"That the dominion government should itself take official cognizance of the situation and make a grant that is proportionately even more generous than that of our own government, was as unexpected as it was gracious."

"The promptness of the act shows how spontaneous it was. It ought to be remembered as a beautiful incident in the history of the two countries which are neighbors, in a sense in which no two other nations in the whole world are neighbors, for no two others occupy a similar relative position toward each other and the rest of the world, and the respective interests and people and territories of no other two come in touch along a continuous line 4,000 miles in extent."
