But on this morning as he lay in his bed Monty was thinking deeply and painfully. He was confronted by a most embarrassing condition, and he was discussing it soberly with himself. "I've never told her," he said to himself, "but if she doesn't know my feeling she is not as clever as I think. Besides, I haven't time to make love to her now. If it were any other girl I suppose I'd have to, but Babs—why, she must understand. And yet—hang that duke!"

In order to woo her properly he would be compelled to neglect financial duties that needed every particle of brain energy at his command. He found himself opposed at the outset by a startling embarrassment, made absolutely clear by the computations of the night before. The last four days of indifference to finance on one side and pampering the heart on the other had proved very costly. To use his own expression, he had been "set back" almost $5,000. An average like that would be ruinous.

"Why, think of it," he continued. "For each day sacrificed to Barbara I must deduct something like $2,500. A long campaign would put me irretrievably in the hole; I'd get so far behind that a holocaust couldn't put me even. She can't expect that of me, yet girls are such idiots about devotion, and of course she doesn't know what a heavy task I am facing. And there are the others—what will they do while I am out of the running? I cannot go to her and say: 'Please, may I have a year's vacation? I'll come back next September.' On the other hand, I shall surely neglect my business if she expects me to compete. What pleasure shall I get out of the seven millions if I lose her? I can't afford to take chances. That duke won't have seven millions next September, it's true, but he'll have a prodigious argument against me about the 21st or 22d."

Then a brilliant thought occurred to him which caused him to ring for a messenger boy with such a show of impatience that Rawles stood aghast. The telegram which Monty wrote was as follows:

Swearingen Jones, Butte, Mont.:
May I marry and turn all property over to wife, provided she will have me?
MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

"Why isn't that reasonable?" he asked himself after the boy had gone. "Making property over to one's wife is neither a loan nor is it charity. Old Jones might call it needless extravagance, since he's a bachelor, but it's generally done because it's good business." Monty was hopeful.

Following his habit in trouble, he sought Margaret Gray, to whom he could always appeal for advice and consolation. She was to come to his next dinner party, and it was easy to lead up to the subject in hand by mentioning the other guests.

"And Barbara Drew," he concluded after naming all the others. They were alone in the library, and she was drinking in the details of the dinner as he related them.

"Wasn't she at your first dinner?" she asked quickly.

He successfully affected mild embarrassment. "Yes."

"She must be very attractive." There was no venom in Peggy's heart.

"She is attractive. In fact, she's one of the best, Peggy," he said, paving the way.

"It's too bad she seems to care for that little duke."

"He's a bounder," he argued. "Well, don't take it to heart. You don't have to marry him." And Peggy laughed.

"But I do take it to heart, Peggy," said Monty seriously. "I'm pretty hard hit, and I want your help. A sister's advice is always the best in a matter of this sort."

She looked into his eyes dully for an instant, not realizing the full importance of his confession.

"You, Monty?" she said incredulously. "I've got it bad, Peggy," he replied, staring hard at the floor. She could not understand the cold gray tone that suddenly enveloped the room. The strange sense of loneliness that came over her was inexplicable. The little something that rose in her throat would not, be dislodged, nor could she throw off the weight that seemed pressing down upon her. He saw the odd look in her eyes and the drawn, uncertain smile on her lips, but he attributed them to wonder and incredulity.

Somehow after all these years he was transformed before her very eyes. She was looking upon a new personality. He was no longer Montgomery the brother, but she could not explain how and when the change crept over her. What did it all mean? "I am very glad if it will make you happy, Monty," she said slowly, the gray in her lips giving way to red once more.

"Does she know?"

"I haven't told her in so many words, Peggy, but—but I'm going to this evening," he announced lamely.

"This evening?"

"I can't wait," Monty said as he rose to go. "I'm glad you're pleased, Peggy. I need your good wishes. And, Peggy," he continued, with a touch of boyish wistfulness, "do you think there's a chance for a fellow? I've had the very deuce of a time over that Englishman."

It was not quite easy for her to say: "Monty, you are the best in the world. Go in and win."

From the window she watched him swing off down the street, wondering if he would turn to wave his hand to her, his custom for years. But the broad back was straight and uncompromising. His long strides carried him swiftly out of sight, but it was many minutes before she turned her eyes, which were aching, a little from the point where he was lost in the crowd. The room looked ashen to her as she brought her mind back to it, and somehow things had grown different.

When Montgomery reached home he found this telegram from Mr. Jones: Montgomery Brewster, New York City: Stick to your knitting, you fool.
S. JONES.

CHAPTER IX.

IT is best not to repeat the expressions Brewster used regarding one S. Jones after reading this telegram. But he felt considerably relieved after he had uttered them. He fell to reading accounts of the big prize fight which was to take place in San Francisco that evening. He revealed in the descriptions of "upper cuts" and "left hooks" and learned incidentally that the affair was to be quite one sided. A local amateur was to box a champion. Quick to see an opportunity and cajoling himself into the belief that Swearingen Jones would not object to such a display of sportsmanship, Brewster made Harrison book several good wagers on the result. He intimated that he had reason to believe that the favorite would lose. Harrison soon placed $3,000 on his man. The young financier felt so sure of the result that he entered the bets on the profit side of his ledger the moment he received Harrison's report. (To be Continued.)

DUELS FOLLOW THE DREYFUS VICTORY.

Colonel Picquart Refuses to Fire and his Adversary, General Gonsse, Shoots Badly.

Paris, July 13.—As a consequence of the Dreyfus enquiry, General Gonsse, former assistant chief of the General Staff, who is opposed to Dreyfus' claims, challenged Colonel Picquart, former head of the intelligence department of the French army, who is a strong supporter of Dreyfus. An encounter with pistols at twenty five paces was arranged for with the result that the General fired and missed his adversary.

The Colonel refused to fire. The duel took place at two o'clock yesterday afternoon at Tour Villeton General Gonsse firing two shots at Colonel Picquart but without wounding him.

On leaving the field of honor they failed to observe the usual custom of reconciliation.

The duel aroused the greatest interest throughout Paris.

Colonel Picquart's second was his brother-in-law, Deputy Gast, M. Judet, director of the national newspaper L'Eclair, acted in a like capacity for General Gonsse.

Other such incidents of the Dreyfus trial are expected, perhaps one in which General Mercier will be a principal.

Miss Lockhart has resigned the position of head nurse at Chipman Memorial Hospital, St. Stephen, to take a post graduate course in Boston.

She is succeeded by Miss Viola MacSwain, a graduate of the Prince Edward Island Hospital at Charlottetown.

ANOTHER WONDERFUL CASE.

Here is something that will be Welcome News to Many a Discouraged One.

"For several years I have been troubled with gas around my heart, shortness of breath, in fact, if I walked my usual gait my breath would get so short I would be compelled to make several stops during my walk."

"Of late my food did not digest properly. It turned sour in my stomach, causing me great distress; often, too, I had disagreeable attacks of belching gas and heartburn."

"I was bothered with severe pains across the small of my back, and the least bending or turning would cause me to almost cry out."

"I was induced to try Dr. Leonard's Anti-Pill and from the very first found relief."

"For the last three months I have had no recurrence of my former complaints, so I am bound to say that Anti-Pill indeed cured me."

This is the voluntary statement of Wm. H. Reed, of 165 Queen Street, Kingston, Ont.
All Druggists sell Anti-Pill. The Wilson-Ryle Co., Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont.
The remedy that cured such an extreme case is surely worth trying.

ARTISTS WHO FAIRLY FLY.

Aerial Circus One of the Latest Things in the Modern Ring Show.

The modern circus, is, to a great extent, "up in the air." Instead of two or three trapeze performers, a very large part of the up to date circus company is made up of aerial experts. This, it is said, is particularly true of Barnum & Bailey's circus this year. The advantage of the aerial performance to the spectator, is the fact that it can be seen from all parts of the great arena. To the performer it means a freedom of acrobatic and an opportunity of inaugurating new ideas that the rings and hippodrome track do not afford. It is scarcely possible that a complete aerial circus, with everything performed in mid-air, will ever be an actuality, but it is certain that the future will see even a greater development along this line than has been the case during the past few years.

That the "aerial circus" idea has come to stay is, however, amply demonstrated by the Barnum & Bailey Greatest Show on Earth, this season, judging from the many mid air performances that receive special mention in the newspaper reviews of the big show. One of these reviews says:

"A very large part of the Barnum & Bailey circus performance was given in the air, and it was an innovation that appealed strongly to the audience. Owing to the enormous proportions of the great hippodrome tent, there was times when it was difficult to see the performance in the middle ring, from the far end of the amphitheatre, but the aerial performers always stood out like moving silhouettes against the background of the great canvass dome. The aerial performance, too, was sufficiently diversified to suit the most eccentric taste. In fact, much of it was of a distinctly thrilling, and even startling nature. There was, for instance, a handsome young American girl who took a flight through the air in an automobile, upside down; there were bicyclists who turned somersaults in the air on the bicycles; there were aerial acrobats who performed almost incredible feats on a platform elevated thirty or forty feet from the ground and with a springing cloth with which the performers were enabled to bound many feet into the air and turn double and triple somersaults before alighting; there was a troupe of eight comely, and shapely young girls who gave an exhibition of aerial wrestling on swaying poles; there was a high wire act, in which a sprightly young woman and four associates, almost equally clever, won unstinted applause by doing a lot of things on a slender cable which, described in print, would seem incredible; there was a company of ten women and men gymnasts who intervening spaces of at least sixty feet, from one trapeze to another, or catching one another with unerring certainty; and so many other aerial numbers that a mere enumeration of them would consume the space usually allotted to the entire programme. Nevertheless, the ground features of the big show were not neglected, and there was a kaleidoscopic intermingling of riding acts, acrobatic acts and acts peculiarly fitted for the rings and racing track that kept the great audience in a constant state of excitement, if not actual bewilderment."

These varied features, it is promised, will all be exhibited when the big show exhibits in Fredericton on July 27th.

SURGICAL MARVEL.

Boy Has Stitches Placed in His Heart and Still Lives.

London, July 13.—A remarkable operation has just been performed at Dundee Royal Infirmary.

A boy, thirteen years old, was admitted to the infirmary with an ugly wound in the wall of his heart, caused through the lad falling on a hay fork. Carefully following the course of the wound, the surgeon sewed up the puncture, and the stitched heart is now reported to be doing its duty successfully.

The operation is not quite wholly without a precedent, for there have been a few cases of somewhat similar character in England within the last ten years.

In June, 1903, the surgeons at the London Hospital accomplished an operation which became famous. They placed three stitches in the heart of John Long, who had been terribly wounded. Though at first the local doctor gave Long only half an hour to live, the operation proved successful and Long recovered.

Twelve months later Dr. Somerville of Leek, sewed up the wounds in the heart of a man who had stabbed himself twice with a penknife. Here, again, the patient recovered.

A few successful operations of the kind have been reported in Paris, Berlin and St. Petersburg. In November, 1903, in Berlin, a doctor extracted a bullet from a young girl's heart.

THE KAISER'S DAUGHTER.

Princess Victoria, the Kaiser's only daughter, is now a well grown up girl. She is tall for her age, and uncommonly plain of feature, but if she lacks any in beauty it is made up in spiritiveness. For one thing, she stands in no awe of her sire, and puts etiquette to flight when any whim seizes her. Apparently this princess has to wear unbearing hats and costumes as a part of royal discipline, for in all her pictures seen over here there is everything to be desired from a dainty American girl's point of view.

Perhaps these photographs tell the Kaiser's daughter's character. But it does seem cruel to dress her in these dowdy things. No human fifteen year old girl can stand it and "look pretty."

She—What is the biggest fist story you ever heard?

One of Three Things Always Cause RHEUMATISM

Do you know the system rids itself of waste matter through bowels and kidneys? Yes, but by the skin as well.

As a matter of fact, the skin rids the system of more urea than the kidneys do.

If the skin, or bowels, or kidneys are unhealthy—they won't throw off enough urea. This urea is changed into uric acid—carried by the blood to joints and nerves—causing Rheumatism.

One never inherits Rheumatism. One does inherit weak kidneys, irregular bowels and bad skin action.

Fruit-A-Tives

will positively cure Rheumatism because they increase the eliminating action of skin, kidneys and bowels—and make these three organs so vigorous and healthy that there can be no urea or waste retained in the system to poison the blood and irritate the nerves.

FRUIT-A-TIVES are fruit juices, combined with tonics—the whole forming the most effective cure for Rheumatism.

JUST A PRETTY ROMANCE.

She Was a Physician, He a Telegrapher; They Met and Married.

Lawrence, Mass., July 13.—While the pretty wedding of Dr. H. Laura Bradley of this city, and Edwin B. Farwell of St. Paul, Minn., yesterday, was not a surprise to the doctor's friends here, the wedding announcement has revived interest in the affair. That Dr. Bradley, after having enjoyed over forty years of single blessedness and established a lucrative practice as a physician, should engage in a matrimonial alliance, was the last thing her friends thought of they said consequently when she announced that she intended to become the bride of a young telegrapher, she astonished all.

The romance was a simple one, and Dr. Bradley's relatives had to see why there should be any unusual public interest in it. Farwell came to Lawrence about two years ago, and engaged rooms at Dr. Bradley's house on the corner of Valley and Lawrence streets. Dr. Bradley showed an interest in her lodger, and gradually a mutual attachment was formed and resulted in marriage.

PAIN ABOUT THE HIPS.

It is a common complaint with women. The right treatment is Nerviline, which penetrates to the seat of the pain immediately. Nerviline warms and soothes the affected parts, draws out the irritation and pain, allows the patient ease after one rubbing. No liniment so economical and safe. Nearly fifty years in use, and the demand immensely greater every day! Nerviline must be good.
