BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

Barbara hesitated only a moment.

"Well, you must admit, Miss Gray, that it shows a shameful lack of character. How could any girl be happy with a man like that? And, after all, one must look out for one's own fate."

"Undoubtedly," replied Peggy, but many thoughts were dashing through her brain.

"Shall we turn back to the cottage?" she said after an awkward silence.

"You certainly don't approve of Mr. Brewster's conduct?" Barbara did not like to be placed in the wrong and felt that she must endeavor to justify herself. "He is the most reckless of spendthrifts, we know, and he probably indulges in even less respectable excitement."

Peggy was not tall, but she carried her head at this moment as though she were in the habit of looking down on the world.

"Aren't you going a little too far, Miss Drew?" she asked placidly.

"It is not only New York that laughs over his Quixotic transactions," Barbara persisted. "Mr. Hampton, our guest from Chicago, says the stories are worse out there than they are in the east."

"It is a pity that Monty's illness should have made him so weak," said Peggy quietly as they turned in through the great iron gates, and Barbara was not slow to see the point.

CHAPTER XVII.

BREWSTER was comparatively well and strong when he returned to New York in March. His illness had interfered extensively with his plan of campaign, and it was imperative that he redouble his efforts, notwithstanding the manifest dismay of his friends. His first act was to call upon Grant & Ripley, from whom he hoped to learn what Swearengen Jones thought of his methods. The lawyers had heard no complaint from Montana and advised him to continue as he had begun, assuring him as far as they could that Jones would not prove unreasonable.

An exchange of telegrams just before his operation had renewed Monty's dread of his eccentric mentor:

New York, Jan. 6, 19—.

Swearengen Jones, Butte, Mont.:
How about having my life insured? Would it violate conditions?
MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York:
Seems to me your life would become an asset in that case. Can you dispose of it before Sept. 23? JONES.

To Swearengen Jones, Butte, Mont.:
On the contrary, I think life will be a debt by that time.
MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York:
If you feel that way about it, I advise you to take out a $500 policy. JONES.

To Swearengen Jones, Butte, Mont.:
Do you think that amount would cover funeral expenses?
MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York:
You won't be caring about expenses if it comes to that. JONES.

The invitations for the second ball had been out for some time, and the preparations were nearly complete when Brewster arrived upon the scene of festivity. It did not surprise him that several old time friends should hunt him up and protest vigorously against the course he was pursuing, nor did it surprise him when he found that his presence was not as essential to the success of some other affair as it had once been. He was not greeted as cordially as before, and he grimly wondered how many of his friends would stand true to the end. The uncertainty made him turn more and more often to the unquestioned loyalty of Peggy Gray, and her little library saw him more frequently than for months.

Much as he had dreaded the pretentious and resplendent ball, it was useful to him in one way at least. The "profit" side of his ledger account was enlarged, and in that there was room for secret satisfaction. The Viennese orchestra straggled into New York headed by Elon Gardner, a physical wreck, in time to make a harmonious farewell appearance behind Brewster's palms, which caused his guests to wonder why the American public could not appreciate the real thing. A careful summing up of the expenses and receipts proved that the tour had been a bonanza for Brewster. The net loss was a trifle more than $56,000. When this story became known about town everybody laughed pityingly, and poor Gardner was almost in tears when he tried to explain the disaster to the man who lost the money. But Monty's sense of humor, singularly enough, did not desert him on this trying occasion.

GOVERNMENT WILL BUY NINE BLOCKS.

Immense Real Estate Deal Under Way at Ottawa for Sites for New Departmental Buildings.

Ottawa, July 30.—The Citizen says—Intending it to be the site for the immense department building, which must be erected in the not far-distant future, the Dominion government is buying up all properties between Rideau and Cathcart streets from Sussex through to Mackenzie avenue.

In several cases properties have been closed for and the money paid over. In others negotiations are in progress and if the price cannot be agreed upon there will be arbitration to determine it.

Mr. Joseph Riopelle is acting for the department of public works in the matter and the proceedings have been taken by way of direct expropriation the government exercising its right in that direction. Upon the recommendation of Mr. Riopelle, the properties are taken and paid for as soon as the necessary papers and titles are furnished. Among those closed for so far are the following:

Francis McDougall, six properties.
Dobell estate, three properties.
Catholic corporation, four properties.
Ib
W. B. Renaud, property.
L. D. Dion, property,

Expropriation notices are being sent out to all other parties who own property in the a bove-named area and an endeavor is being made to agree upon terms, but where this fails recourse, as above stated, will be had to arbitration. The conditions of sale are that the properties acquired shall be relieved of all encumbrances and that in that state they will be handed over to the government which, until the building is erected, will collect all rents. St. John's church and rectory will be taken. Mr. Riopelle's instructions are specific and the deal includes everything between the streets referred to.

The estimated outlay in connection with the acquisition of the properties in question is $1,000,000.

The T. Lindsay store is included in the list of properties to be taken, but it is learned that the expropriation commissioner will not deal with this. The exchequer court will be called upon to decide the amount of damages to be paid in that connection.

When the scheme goes through—and it is expected to be wound up in a few weeks the government will own the nine blocks from Rideau street through to the Mine and the idea is to erect a structure costing up in the millions, to relieve the congestion in the present departmental quarters and to house those offices now scattered throughout the city. Probably at the next session of parliament a further appropriation for the purpose will be made.

"Your Honor," remarked the youthful lawyer for the defence, "my client wishes to gain time."

"All right," replied the obliging judge, "I'll give him six months."

A FARMER PRESIDENT.

Head of the Swiss Confederation a True Democrat.

President Thoron is the first chief magistrate of the Helvetian republic to quit Switzerland during his term of office and to visit a foreign country in his official capacity, writes the Marquis de Fontenoy in the New York Tribune. The visit in question was to Milan, in connection with the International exhibition held there coincident with the opening of the sub-Alpine Simplon Tunnel. The latter is inaugurated in conjunction with King Victor Emmanuel, who deputed his cousin the Count of Turin to do the honors to the President at Milan. Several festivals were arranged for him notably a state performance at the opera house of La Scala.

The president, who is a worthy old man of the farmer class, of a very retiring disposition, was much taken aback by his warm reception, and terribly flustered thereby, his embarrassment leading him to perpetrate all sorts of gaucheries which would have excited ridicule had it not been for his transparently kind, honest face, which caused people to warm toward him.

Thus he was utterly at a loss how to respond to the demonstration with which he was received by the audience at the opera when he entered the royal box with the Count of Turin. Completely disconcerted he thrust his hands into his pockets, then turned his back upon the house and began talking, in a rather agitated way, to a member of his suite completely ignoring the count, who had to whisper to him to stand up when the National Anthem of Italy was being played after the National Anthem of Switzerland.

The old patriciate of Switzerland, which is terribly proud and exclusive, having a horror of misalliances, holds aloof from politics and the only part which it takes in public life is in connection with the army and sometimes in diplomacy, but it is very rare that a man of birth and of breeding attains the rank of President, an office which carries with it a salary, all told, of $3,000 a year.

Sir Horace Rumbold, who was for many years British minister of Berne tells in his recently published reminiscenses how, when calling one day at the house of the then President of the republic to pay his respects and to leave his card, he was admitted in response to his ring by a motherly-looking woman with arms bare, all covered with soap suds, "Madame la Présidente" having come straight from the family washtub to answer the bell. Even Jeffersonian simplicity carried to its utmost limit, could not offer a match for this.

Moreover, a couple of years ago the suicide at Dijon in France, of the twenty-six-year-old son of the then President of the Swiss Republic (a worthy citizen of the name of Comtesse) served to call attention to the act that the young fellow had been engaged up to that time in acquiring experience needed to qualify him as a hotel keeper by acting as head waiter of a second or third rate inn at Dijon.

As in this country, the President of the Swiss Republic has no official costume, and on the occasion of the review of the troops of the confederation at the annual manoeuvres he invariably appears on horseback in full evening dress, white gloves, blacked boots and a high silk hat, usually of an ancient vintage, presenting to all save the initiated a rather strange aspect. But, as I have stated above, the entire absence of all affectation and pretence completely disarms criticism and silences all tendency to ridicule.

DEATH REVEALED DUAL LIFE.

Kansas City Business Man Was Head of Two Households and Was Never Suspected.

Kansas City, Mo., July 27.—Investigation by the police and County Coroner have revealed that Frank C. Luther, secretary-treasurer of the Acme Bedding Company, who died at No. 2,601 Montgall avenue as the result of an overdose of morphine, had been living a double life for six years, during which time he had preserved two separate identities without the closest friends and business associates being aware of it.

As Frank C. Luther he lived at No. 313 West Thirteenth street with his wife. As Frank Hullman, he lived with Mrs. Lillian Hullman, at No. 2,601 Montgall avenue. As Hullman he was understood to be a travelling salesman necessitating his absence from the city most of the time. With Mrs. Hullman he had lived there six years.

Dr. O. H. Parker, a Deputy Coroner, was their family physician. He says he had never the slightest suspicion that the man was other than what he represented himself to be.

Dr. Parker said he had several times treated the man for nervous affections caused by the use of morphine and liquor.

Neighbors at the Montgall house saw "Hullman" often. Mrs. Hullman spoke of him frequently to one neighbor. She said:—P

"Frank is a very nervous man. Why sometimes he gets up in the middle of the night and goes down to the office and works the rest of the night."

An autopsy held upon the body of Luther established that the death was caused from an overdose of morphine. It was not believed that the morphine was taken with suicidal intent.

Luther was one of the incorporators of a bedding company and held a fourth of the stock. Fred Luger, president of the company, checked Luther's salary and share of the profits of the company would enable him to bear the unusual expense of maintaining two domiciles.

Mr. Luger said Luther carried his insurance upon his life. He did not know who was named as beneficiary. Mrs. Luther was in Detroit visiting her sister.

Mrs. Hullman has several brothers and sisters living on the west side. Luther was fifty-four years old. He had no children.
